Al-Falimbānī's Formation of a Scholarship

Introduction

Examining 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī's list of teachers and students enables us to extract further information regarding his intellectual life and scholarly activities. However, as already indicated in the first chapter, only a few of al-Falimbānī's teachers are known to contemporary scholarship, the most famous among these teachers are Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān, Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Mun'im ad-Damanḥūrī, and Muḥammad h. Sulaymān al-Kurdī. On the other hand, from al-Falimbānī's own writings and his ismādh, I have been able to trace the names of numerous other teachers and students of his, mostly unknown to contemporary studies. Therefore, to adequately study this aspect, I have divided this part of this study into two chapters. Chapter Three (this one) contains a thorough analytical survey of all his known teachers in the Arabian Peninsula and based on previously unknown evidence and surveys his teachers in Egypt and Damascus, and Chapter Four offers a critical survey of his known students, on the basis of my research.

It is also important to point out that by examining al-Falimbānī's extensive teacher-student links in the scholarly networks, not only we can learn his connection with the 'ulamā' of his period, but we can also assess his key position in this network, the important role he played in transmitting Islamic religious sciences, and thus, his important contribution to Islamic scholarship and learning in both the Arab and Malay worlds. Furthermore, from his teacher-student links and ismādh, we are also able to classify and analyse the range and extent of various Islamic religious disciplines he studied with each teacher such as fiqh, ḥadīth, tafsīr, taṣawwuf, etc, the intellectual ideas transmitted to him, and the influence of each individual teacher on him.

The methodology applied in these two chapters is to trace his teachers and students from his own writings and isnāds, and to supplement this by looking up each individual teacher and student through the enormous range of biographical dictionaries, a crucial category of sources consulted for this study. I hope that this part of the book as well as the final chapter on al-Falimbānī's writings will provide us with a better understanding of his scholarly life, his significant role in the scholarly networks and his contribution to Islamic scholarship and will assist further in the reconstruction of a more comprehensive and accurate intellectual biography of him.

Al-Falimbānī's Learning Centres in the Arabian Peninsula

As noted above, only a few of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad's teachers have been identified in contemporary studies so far. However, a comprehensive survey of all available sources, including his own writings, biographical accounts written on him, as well as his isnāds, reveal more than thirty scholars found to have teacher-student connections with al-Falimbānī, most of whom were unknown to previous studies. Nevertheless, this research does not claim to have covered all of al-Falimbānī's teachers, as these names are based on my findings in the currently known and available sources for this study.

There is no doubt that examining the biographies of both 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī's teachers and students provides us with crucial information and has helped us to resolve a number of issues surrounding his life such as his dates of birth and death, his family, his travels and his scholarly life.

Among his most famous teachers, two are already known to contemporary scholars. These are Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān, whom he considered his spiritual guide, and Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Mun'im ad-Damānḥūrī, whose lectures he attended and noted down in Zahrat al-Murīd. Apart from these two teachers, we can extract from his own works that he also studied with other leading scholars of his time. These include, in Mecca: 'Aṭā' Allāh b. Ahmad al-Miṣrī al-Makkī, 'Abd al-Ghānī b. Muḥammad Hilāl al-Makkī; in Medina: 'Abd ar-Rahmān b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-'Umari al-Maghribī, Ṣiddīq b. 'Umar Khān al-Madanī, 'Abd al-Ghānī b. Abī Bakr b. 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Qāsim better known as 'al-'Ālim as-Ṣūfī al-Hindī al-Madanī, and Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī al-Madanī; and in al-Ṭā'if: 'Abd Allāh Mīrghānī. Moreover, his own Yemeni disciple, 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Ahdal, in addition to the above-mentioned 'Aṭā' [Allāh] al-Miṣrī and Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī also lists other teachers of al-Falimbānī. They include Ibrāhīm ar-Ra'īs, Muḥammad Mirdād and Muḥammad al-Jawharī.<sup>1</sup> Furthermore, both al-Qannūjī and al-Bayṭār, in addition to the list provided by al-Ahdal, also record another scholar with whom al-Falimbānī studied, namely Muḥammad Murād.<sup>2</sup> However, it is not clear where he met these last six listed teachers.

Above all, al-Fādānī's numerous isnād writings enable us to further trace al-Falimbānī's teachers. The rest of the scholars with whom al-Falimbānī also studied include 'ulamā'' of Yemen such as Yaḥyā al-Ahdal, Ahmad Sharīf Maqbūl al-Ahdal, Amr Allāh b. 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Mizjājī, Ahmad b. Sulaymān al-Hajjām, and Mushayyakh b. Zayn Bā 'Ubūd. In fact, all five of them are from Zabīd. His Meccan teachers include Sālim al-Baṣrī and 'Umar b. Ahmad as-Saqqīf al-'Alawī, in addition to the above-mentioned teachers extracted from his own writings. Adding further to the above list of Arab teachers, al-Falimbānī also studied with Jāwī 'ulamā'' such as 'Aqīb b. Ḥasan ad-Dīn al-Falimbānī, Muḥammad Zayn b. Faḡīh Jalāl ad-Dīn al-Ashī, and 'Abd ar-Rahmān b. 'Abd al-Mubīn al-Faṭānī, as made evident from some of al-Fādānī's writings.

As already indicated, we know that 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī spent at least thirty-five years studying in Arabia. Moreover, the fact that almost all of his known teachers and other learned associates figure prominently in Arabic biographical dictionaries and other Arabic writings indicates the indisputable prominence of al-Falimbānī's intellectual background. In what follows, I discuss his teachers according to location in and outside the Arabian Peninsula.

Zabīd, Yemen

As far as I can ascertain, the evidence shows that the first teacher of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī in the Arab world was the Yemeni scholar, Yahyā al-Ahdal (1073-1147/1662-1734).<sup>1</sup> His full name is 'Imād ad-Dīn Yahya b. 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Qādir b. Aḥmad b. 'Abd Allāh b. Abī Bakr b. Maqbūl b. Aḥmad b. Yahya b. Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad b. 'Umar b. as-Sayyid ash-Shaykh al-Kabīr Abī Bakr 'Alī (better known by the surname al-Ahdal) b. 'Umar b. Muḥammad b. Sulaymān b. 'Ubayd b. 'Isā b. 'Alī b. Muḥammad b. Ḥamḥām b. 'Awn b. Musā al-Kāzim b. Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq b. Muḥammad al-Bāqir b. 'Alī Zayn al-'Ābidīn b. al-Ḥusayn as-Sibt b. Amīr al-Mu'minin 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib. He is described further as al-Maqbūl al-Ahdal al-Ḥusaynī ash-Shāfi'i az-Zabīdī al-Yamanī. He was evidently an important scholar in the distinguished al-Ahdal family.<sup>2</sup> His genealogy is traced back to Ḥusayn son of 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib (عليه السلام) and Fāṭimah, and the Prophet SAW. He was born in the village of ad-Durayhimī in the municipality of Wādī Rimāl, Yemen, where he grew up and memorised the Qur'ān at an early age. Later, he migrated to the city of Zabīd, where he memorised Abū al-Qāsim ash-Shāfi'ī's (d. 590/1194) matn (text) of ash-Shāfi'iyyah, a versification of Abū 'Amr ad-Dīnī's (d. 444/1052) compendium of the 'Seven Readings' of the Qur'ān (al-qirā'at as-sab'ah); and the al-Aḥfiyyah of Ibn Mālik (d. 672/1273), the one thousand verse didactic poem covering the entire rules of Arabic grammar.<sup>3</sup>

Better known as Yahyā b. 'Umar al-Ahdal, he was a faqīh, mufasssīr (Qur'ān exegete), muhaddith of Yemen and the muftī of the Shāfi'i School of Islamic jurisprudence in Zabīd. His grandson 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Ahdal described him as the 'sole leader of the time and as peerless' (waḥīd 'aṣrīhī wa-farīd miṣrīhī) especially in tafsīr, ḥadīth and qirā'āt. His student, Ibrāhīm b. Aḥmad al-Khulīl az-Zabīdī (d. 1263/1846), who later became a prominent scholar in Zabīd, wrote a separate biographical account about him in his al-Manhaj al-'Adal fi Sharḥ Maṭṭil al-Ahdal.<sup>4</sup> According to him, Yahyā al-Ahdal was a leading scholar and an expert in virtually every aspect of the Islamic Sciences, who grasped the mantūq (external meaning) and mafhūm (implied meaning) of these sciences. However, though Yahyā al-Ahdal was an expert in various branches of Islamic sciences, it was in ḥadīth and its sciences that he became most outstanding. He was thus called the ḥāfiẓ al-ʿaṣr (the most reliable specialist of ḥadīth of the age) and muhaddith al-iqīm (the muhaddith of Yemen). His memorization and deep knowledge of ḥadīth is something that no one could precisely describe. Apart from memorising nearly the whole of Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī and Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, he was generally well versed in the knowledge (maʿrifat) of ḥadīth, both the narration (riwāyah) and understanding (dirāyah), the study of the transmitters of ḥadīth (rijāl al-ḥadīth), various lines of transmission (isnāds) and the categories and status of ḥadīth. He was regarded as the 'leading authority of his period' (imām ahl zamānihi) and was given precedence over his peers.<sup>7</sup>

Yahyā al-Aḥdal's Yemeni teachers include prominent scholars such as Abū Bakr b. 'Alī b. Muḥammad al-Baṭṭāḥ al-Aḥdal (d. 1099/1687), from whom he inherited his ḥadīth knowledge, grammar and jurisprudence and received the 'superior isnād' (al-isnād al-ʿālī), which, according to ash-Shawkānī, was the 'highest isnād' in the whole of Yemen. This is evident in his ḥabab entitled Majmūʿ fī ʿI-Asānīd, which ash-Shawkānī regards as a priceless work and anyone who came after him studying ḥadīth were indebted to him and considered his pupils.<sup>8</sup> His student, Qāḍī Aḥmad b. Muḥammad Qāṣin (d. 1199/1785), wrote a biographical account of al-Aḥdal in his Tuḥfat al-Ikhwān bi-Sanad Sayyid Walad ʿAdnān, and eulogised him as the 'seal of the ḥadīth scholars' (khāṭimat al-muhaddithīn) and the 'leader of Those of Gnosis' (imām al-ʿArifīn).<sup>9</sup>

In addition to Abū Bakr al-Baṭṭāḥ, al-Aḥdal also studied ḥadīth with a group of ḥuffāz (reliable specialists of ḥadīth) such as the Qāḍī Saʿī ad-Dīn Aḥmad h. Ishāq h. Muḥammad h. Jaʿmān az-Zahīdī (d. 1110/1698), with whom he studied ḥadīth books including Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī and Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, and fiqh books of ash-Shāfiʿī Madhhab including al-Minhāj, Fatḥ al-Wahhāb and al-Irshād. With the excellent reciter of the Qurʾān, ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd al-Bāqī al-Mizjābī az-Zahīdī, whom he calls 'Shaykh al-Qurrā', he studied Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, al-Qirāʾat as-Sahāḥ, as-Suyūṭī's al-Iqān fī ʿUlūm al-Qurʾān, among other works.

During his visit to Mecca to perform the ḥajj in 1106/1695, Yahyā al-Aḥdal took the opportunity to study with the 'ulama' of al-Ḥaramayn. They include among others, ʿAbd Allāh al-Baṣrī (1049-1134/1639-1722), Aḥmad an-Nakhilī (1040-1130/1630-1717), Ḥasan h. ʿAlī al-ʿUjymī (1049-1113/1639-1701), with whom he studied the Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī in 1107/1695, and Ahmad al-Tanīlī al-Maghribī al-Madanī. All of them eventually granted him their ijāzah.<sup>10</sup> It is worth noting that these al-Ḥaramayn scholars were students of leading scholars of the early seventeenth century, including the Egyptian maḥaddith Muḥammad b. 'Alā' ad-Dīn al-Bābīlī al-Qāhīrī (1000-77/1591-1666), the two prominent Maghribī scholars, 'Isā b. Muḥammad al-Ja'farī ath-Tha'ālībī al-Maghribī and later al-Makkī (1020-80/1611-69) and Muḥammad b. Sulaymān ar-Raddānī al-Maghribī (1037-94/1626-83), and the two renowned 'ālim and Ṣāfi's of Medina, Ahmad b. Muḥammad al-Qushāshī (991-1071/1538-1661) and his disciple who later became his khalīfah, Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī (1025-1101/1616-90).<sup>11</sup> Yahyā al-Aḥdal's connections with these scholars are evident from his isnāds.<sup>12</sup> According to al-Ḥādānī, apart from Majmū' fī 'l-Asānīd, he also authored a ṭabaqat entitled al-Badr al-Akmal fī Asānīd as-Sayyid Yahyā b. 'Umar Maḥbūl al-Aḥdal where he listed his teachers and the works he studied with them along with his isnāds to these works.<sup>13</sup> He died in Zabīd on 14th Rabī' al-Ākhir 1147/13th September 1734 at the age of seventy-four.

Yahyā al-Aḥdal had such high standing as a scholar and notable person that he was qualified to resolve differences. He mediated in the dispute on the permissibility of constructing buildings on Endowment lands belonging to the main mosque in Zabīd. He wrote his al-Qaw' as-Sadīd fī-nā' Ḥadīth min 'l-'Imārah bi-l-Jāmi' Zabīd on this question. As a distinguished scholar of fiqh, tafsīr and ḥadīth, and on the basis of his understanding of the juristic proofs (dalīl) from the Qur'ān and the Sunnah, he was able to make his own independent ijtihād (legal reasoning), to the extent that some of the followers of the Shāfi'ī Madhhab accused him of deviation from the Shāfi'ī School of Islamic jurisprudence. The amīr of Zabīd stood in awe of him because he proclaimed the truth with audacity and vehemence and was insistent upon enjoining virtue. He seemed to have chosen to live an ascetic life despite being endowed with wealth and possessions. He regularly reminded his disciples during his lectures of the Prophetic SAW saying: "be like a stranger in the world, or as a passerby on the road" (kun fī 'd-dunyā kaannaka gharīb aw 'ābir sabīl), and he exhorted them to reject worldly pleasures and temptations.<sup>14</sup>

As he was the most prominent muhaddith and ‘ālim in Yemen of his time and possessed the al-ṣuʿūd al-‘ālī, it is not surprising that he attracted students not only from Bilād ash-Shām (Greater Syria) and al-Ḥijāz but also from far and beyond to attend his ḥalaqahs. His local Yemeni students, especially from Zabīd, according to al-Qannūjī, constituted the great majority of distinguished figures or as he puts it ‘sawād ‘ayn al-bilād.<sup>15</sup> His best known disciples were, among others, Ahmad b. Muḥammad Maqbūl al-Ahdal (d. 1163/1749), Ahmad b. Muḥammad Qāṭin as-Ṣan‘ānī (1118-99/1706-85), ‘Abd Allāh b. Sulaymān al-Jarhazī (1138-1201/1725-86), Muḥammad b. ‘Alī ad-Dīn al-Mizjājī (1102-80/1690-1766), and Amr Allāh b. ‘Abd al-Khālīq al-Mizjājī (d. 1207/1793).

We already know that al-Falimbānī attended his teaching sessions but only had the opportunity to study with him the works of al-Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Ḥajar al-‘Asqalānī (d. 852/1448), especially his collection of ḥadīth entitled Bulūgh al-Marām min Adillat al-Aḥkām, which deals with jurisprudence based on Qur’ān and ḥadīth.<sup>16</sup> This presumably indicates that he only arrived and met al-Ahdal in the last years of the latter’s life. Otherwise, al-Falimbānī would have taken the opportunity to study with him other Islamic disciplines, on which he was known to have been an expert. Furthermore, it is clear that after Yahyā al-Ahdal’s death, al-Falimbānī continued to study with his disciple and nephew, Ahmad b. Muḥammad Maqbūl al-Ahdal.

The next teacher of al-Falimbānī in Yemen was [Ṣafī ad-Dīn] Ahmad b. Muḥammad b. ‘Umar Sharīf Maqbūl ash-Shāfi‘ī al-Ahdal (1109-63/1697-1749). Born in the village of ad-Durayhimī, he later moved to Zabīd where he stayed and studied with his maternal uncle Yahyā al-Ahdal. Not only was he the maternal nephew of Yahyā al-Ahdal, but he was also one of his closest disciples. He regarded Yahyā al-Ahdal as one of his major teachers with whom he graduated and to whom he was affiliated, ‘shaykh at-takhrīj wa ‘-intisāh.<sup>17</sup>

Ahmad al-Ahdal inherited his maternal uncle’s knowledge, especially in the Islamic sciences of kufīr and ḥadīth, so that he was also known as a muhaddith. Other than tafsīr and ḥadīth, he also mastered other Islamic disciplines including ‘ilm al-qirā’āt as-sah’ah, fiqh, uṣūl, naḥw, ṣarf, al-mantiq (logic), al-nu’awī (the science of meanings), al-bayān (the science of rhetoric), al-baḍī' (the science of eloquence), al-ḥisāb (arithmetic), al-jabr (algebra), al-falak (astronomy) and al-handasah (geometry).

In addition to studying with Yahyā, Aḥmad al-Aḥdal also studied directly with the latter's teachers, including the earlier mentioned Abū Bakr b. 'Alī al-Baṭṭāḥ al-Aḥdal and Aḥmad b. Ishāq b. Ja'mān. It is worth noting that the father of Aḥmad Ja'mān, Ishāq b. Muḥammad b. Ja'mān az-Zabīdī (1014-96/1605-85), also a Qāḍī, was included among 'Abd ar-Ra'ūf al-Jāwī as-Sinkīlī's teachers in Zabīd.<sup>18</sup> Thus, this clearly reflects that al-Falimbānī was continuing the scholarly traditions of his Jāwī predecessors in his strive to acquire Islamic religious knowledge from the very heart of the Islamic epicentre and learning.

Apart from studying in Zabīd, Aḥmad al-Aḥdal also travelled frequently to al-Ḥaramayn, especially to Mecca where he met and studied directly with 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī in Dhū al-Qa'dah, 1122/December 1710, and Aḥmad an-Nakhli in Raḥī' al-Awwal, 1123/April 1711.<sup>19</sup> He once again travelled to Mecca in 1152/1739 where he met 'Alī b. 'Abd Allāh Bā-Iḥṣayn as-Saqqāf, from whom he received al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi-yawm al-'id or 'the successive chain of the ḥadīth narrated on the festive day.'<sup>20</sup> While in Medina, Aḥmad al-Aḥdal studied with Muḥammad Abū Ṭāhir al-Kūrānī (1081-1145/1670-1732), who in turn studied with his father Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī, and Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī, both the aforementioned were seventeenth century renowned scholars in Medina and Mecca respectively.<sup>21</sup>

As a prominent scholar in Zabīd after his uncle Yahyā, obviously Aḥmad al-Aḥdal had many students coming to study with him. Among them, apart from al-Falimbānī himself were the previously mentioned son of Yahyā, Sulaymān b. Yahyā al-Aḥdal, Aḥmad and Qāsim, the sons of Sulaymān al-Ḥajjām, Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad al-Amīr (d. 1213/1798),<sup>22</sup> and Yūsuf b. Muḥammad b. 'Alā' ad-Dīn al-Mizjāji (1140-1213/1727-98), who later became a teacher to two leading late eighteenth century scholars in Medina and Yemen, the Indian-born Medinese muhaddith also known as 'Ḥāfiz of Hijāz,' Muḥammad 'Ābid as-Sindī al-Anṣārī al-Madani (d. 1257/1841), and the famous Yemeni scholar, the muhaddith, faqīh and reformer, Qāḍī Muḥammad b. 'Alī ash-Shawkānī (d. 1250/1834).<sup>23</sup>

Apparently, al-Falimbānī spent a relatively considerable time studying with Aḥmad al-Aḥdal. As one can see from al-Falimbānī's own isnād, his studies with him were extensive. He studied numerous Islamic sciences and read a number of works with him, including, among others, an-Nawawī's (d. 676/1277) al-Minhāj, al-Majmū' Sharḥ al-Muhaddithah, and al-Idārah fī Maḥāsik al-Ḥajj, al-Khaṭīb ash-Sharḥīnī's (d. 977/1569) Mughnī al-Muhtāj Sharḥ al-Minhāj, Muḥib ad-Dīn al-Ṭabarī's (d. 684/1295) al-Qirā' li-Qāsidī Uṣul al-Qurā, Jalāl ad-Dīn al-Mahallī's (d. 864/1459) Kanz ar-Rāghibīn Sharḥ al-Minhāj, Bā-Faḍl's (d. 918/1512) al-Muqaddimah al-Ḥaḍramiyyah and its commentary by Ibn Isḥār al-Haytamī (d. 974/1566), entitled al-Minhāj al-Qawfā, al-ʿArīḍī's (631/1233) al-Iḥkām fī Uṣūl al-Aḥkām, and Ibn al-Ḥajjīb's (d. 646/1249) Muṭabāʾ as-Sūl wa 'l-Aḥl on uṣūl al-fiqh (Principles of Islamic sacred law); Abū Bakr al-Aḥdal's (d. 1035/1625) al-Farā'id al-Bahīyyah on qawā'id al-fiqh (Maxims of Jurisprudence). All these works are on fiqh. On ḥadīth, he studied an-Nawawī's al-Arḥā'ū and Riyāḍ as-Sāliḥīn, and Zayn ad-Dīn al-ʿIrāqī's (d. 806/1403) Alfiyyat al-Ḥadīth on nūṣ al-ḥadīth; on tafsīr, he read al-Baghawī's (d. 516/1122) Mu'allaḥ at-Tanzīl; on theology, he read Burhān ad-Dīn an-Nasafī's (d. 537/1142) al-Aqā'id an-Nasafīyyah; on grammar, he read the commentary or sharḥ of Ibn Aqīl (d. 769/1367) on the famous al-Alfiyyah of Ibn Mālik (d. 672/1273) and his al-Musā'id 'alā Tashīl al-Fawā'id, also a commentary on Ibn Mālik's Tashīl al-Fawā'id wa-Takmil al-Maqāsid, and three works by Ibn Hāshim (d. 761/1359): Qaṭr an-Nadā, Shudhūr adh-Dhahab, and al-F'rāh 'an Qawā'id al-F'rāh; all of these works are classics on naḥw and sarf.<sup>24</sup>

It is certain that Aḥmad al-Aḥdal possessed a thorough knowledge of various branches of Islamic disciplines. Al-Qannūjī points out that he was one of the few scholars in his time blessed by God with a perspicacious mind so that he could solve any complicated problem in virtually any discipline with ease.<sup>25</sup> Likewise, since al-Falimbānī was one of his students, he too must have, to some extent, inherited at least some of his thorough knowledge as can be expected from the above-mentioned Islamic discipline and the lists of highly esteemed books he studied with him.

Among the Yemeni teachers of al-Falimbāni, we must include Amr Allāh [Khawājah] b. 'Abd al-Khāliq b. az-Zayn b. Muḥammad Bāqī b. as-Ṣiddīq b. 'Abd al-Bāqī b. as-Ṣiddīq h. az-Zayn h. Ismā'īl al-Mizjāji al-Ḥanafī az-Zabīdī al-Ash'arī,<sup>26</sup> who was the son of a leading Yemeni mufaddliḥ, 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Mizjāji who died in 1152/1739.<sup>27</sup>

Amr Allāh al-Mizjāji, like his father 'Abd al-Khāliq, was known mainly as a mufaddliḥ.<sup>28</sup> Though no available sources supply us with his year of birth, he was reported to have been a mū'ammār (long-lived). This is plausible as Amr Allāh al-Mizjāji received ḥadīth instruction directly from Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī who died in 1113/1701.<sup>29</sup> At the same time, later generations of scholars such as 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Aḥdal, who was born in 1179/1765, also shared this same teacher with al-Falimbāni as he was reported to have received al-ḥudūth al-nusakal hi 'L-awwalīyyah,<sup>30</sup> highly from Amr Allāh al-Mizjāji.<sup>31</sup> Furthermore, a contemporary and a student of 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Aḥdal, the already mentioned renowned mufaddliḥ of Medina in the late eighteenth century, Muḥammad 'Ābid as-Sindī al-Madani (1190-1257/1776-1841) himself, also met and studied with Amr Allāh al-Mizjāji.<sup>32</sup> It is worth noting that Amr Allāh al-Mizjāji was one of the six teachers of 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Aḥdal included in his aṭ-ṭabaqāt al-ūlā, covering his Zabīd teachers who studied with his grandfather, Yahyā al-Aḥdal. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Aḥdal further relates that in 1202/1787, he and his schoolfellow, Sa'd ad-Dīn h. Sa'īd al-Qarwānī, visited Amr Allāh al-Mizjāji and stayed with him for three days. During this time he read with him works on ḥadīth and taṣawwuf and received the transmission of dhikr, litany formula (talqīn adh-dhikr) for both the Qādiriyyah Order to be pronounced out loud (jahrān) and that of the Naqshabandiyyah Order to be done silently (sirrān). Amr Allāh al-Mizjāji in turn had received the Ṣūfī Order from Yahyā al-Aḥdal who also dressed him in the Ṣūfī 'patched mantle' (al-khiṭat as-ṣūfiyyah).<sup>33</sup>

Among Amr Allāh's teachers were his own father 'Abd al-Khāliq b. az-Zayn al-Mizjāji, Yahyā al-Aḥdal, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad Sharīf Maqbūl al-Aḥdal, and other Zabīd scholars of the latter's generations such as Sa'īd al-Kaḥūfī and 'Abd al-Khāliq h. Abī Bakr al-Mizjāji (1100-81/1688-1768). His al-ḥaramayn teachers included, among others in Medina, the prominent Indian mufaddliḥ, Muḥammad Iḥyāt as-Sindī

(d. 1163/1749), who himself was a student of 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī (d. 1134/1722) and Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Ḥādī as-Sindī, better known as Abū al-Ḥasan as-Sindī al-Kabīr (d. 1138/1726). Muḥammad Ḥayāt as-Sindī was also a teacher of the famous Islamic theologian and reformer, founder of the Wahhābī movement, Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Wahhāb (1115-1206/1703-92).<sup>34</sup> Muḥammad Ḥayāt eventually granted Amr Allāh al-Mizjānī an ijāzah and handed him his thahat entitled al-Wijāzah fi 'l-Ijāzah. In Mecca Amr Allāh studied with, among others, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. Sa'īd better known as Ibn 'Aqīlah (d. 1150/1737), a well-known muhaddith who authored a famous work on al-ḥadīth al-musalsal (the traditions with a continuous chain of transmitters) entitled al-Fawā'id al-Jalīlah fi Musalsakāt Ibn 'Aqīlah.<sup>35</sup> According to al-Fādānī, both Amr Allāh al-Mizjānī and his teacher, Aḥmad al-Aḥdal also studied with a Jāwī scholar who resided in Medina, namely 'Āqīb b. Ḥasan ad-Dīn al-Falimbānī. As we shall see shortly, this Jāwī scholar was also one of 'Abd as-Samad al-Falimbānī's own teachers in Medina.<sup>36</sup>

In addition to receiving ḥadīth from his father, Amr Allāh al-Mizjānī possessed isnād through his father that connected him with such scholars as Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī, 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥaddād, 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī and Abū al-Ḥasan as-Sindī al-Kabīr. Therefore, he was among the most sought-after in the isnāds of the scholarly networks during this period. Al-Fādānī tells us that Amr Allāh al-Mizjānī provided a comprehensive list of his teachers and isnāds in his concise thahat entitled al-Qawf ul-Munjī fi Thahat al-Mizjānī.<sup>37</sup>

According to 'Aydārūs al-Ḥabshī, Amr Allāh al-Mizjānī died in 1207/1793 and his student, Muḥammad 'Ābid as-Sindī relates that he was buried at at-Tabiyyah, a well-known village outside Zabīd.<sup>38</sup>

The last among the list of al-Falimbānī's known teachers in Yemen is Aḥmad b. Sulaymān [Abī al-Qāsim] b. Abī Bakr ['Umar Abakr] b. Sulaymān b. Abī Bakr b. Muḥammad b. 'Umar b. Abī al-Qāsim b. Abī Bakr b. Abī al-Qāsim b. 'Umar b. 'Alī b. 'Umar al-Ḥajjām al-Aḥdal al-Ḥusaynī al-Aḥdalī az-Zabīdī.<sup>39</sup>

There is no information on his dates of birth and death, but what we can derive from his life account is that he was a scholar from Zabīd and was reported to have been alive in 1212/1797. According to his student, Muḥammad 'Ābid as-Sindī in his isnād on receiving 'the tradition with continuous chain for the Ṣūfī mantle' (al-musalsal bi-lībās al-khirqah as-ṣūfīyyah), Aḥmad al-Hajjām clothed him with his 'white turban' ('imāmah bayḍā') in 1212/1797 at al-Quṭay', a village in Yemen. Aḥmad al-Hajjām in turn had received it from his father Sulaymān al-Hajjām, who had received it from Yahyā al-Aḥdal, who in turn had received it from the hand of his own teacher, the Meccan Ṣūfī and 'ālim Shaykh Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī. It should be noted in passing that Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī's *ismāʿī*s demonstrate that he had extensive scholarly connections with earlier generations of prominent scholars and renowned Ṣūfīs who included among others, Aḥmad al-Qushāshī, Aḥmad ash-Shinnāwī, 'Abd al-Wahhāb ash-Sha'rānī, Jalāl ad-Dīn as-Suyūṭī, leading back to Ibn al-'Arabī, 'Abd al-Qādir al-Jilānī, and as far as the earliest Ṣūfīs al-Junayd al-Baghdādī, as-Sarī as-Suqatī, and Ma'rūf al-Karkhī.<sup>40</sup>

Aḥmad al-Hajjām had studied, among others, with his own father Sulaymān, Aḥmad al-Aḥdal, Aḥmad b. Idrīs b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Alī al-Idrīsī, 'Abd al-Khāliq b. Abī Bakr al-Mizjāji, Muḥammad b. 'Alī ad-Dīn al-Mizjāji (d. 1180/1766) and Aḥmad b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Ashbūlī al-Misrī (d. 1173/1759).<sup>41</sup> His teachers in turn studied with earlier generations of scholars such as 'Abd Allāh al-Basrī, Aḥmad an-Nakhli, and Abū Jāhīr Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī.

His father, Sulaymān al-Hajjām, better known as 'Sāhib al-Quṭay'' (master or owner of al-Quṭay'), was also included by Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī among his numerous teachers in Zabīd, with whom he studied sections of an-Nawawī's Riyāḍ as-Ṣāliḥīn and at-Tibyān fī Adāb Ḥamakat al-Qur'ān upon his arrival in al-Quṭay', Yemen in 1166/1752 when he attended his lectures and heard Aḥmad al-Hajjām read these works for the class in the presence of his father. As a sign of initiation into the Ṣūfī order, Sulaymān al-Hajjām dressed Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī with his ṭagīyah (cap or headdress), instructed him in the taḥqīn adh-dhikr for the Qādiriyyah order, and later gave him his general ijāzah.<sup>42</sup>

Obviously, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī was a contemporary to Aḥmad al-Hajjām as he further relates that both of them travelled from Zabīd to Bayt al-Faḥīh in 1164/1750 where they studied with Sayyid Mashhūr [b. Mustarīḥ] al-Aḥdal and received from him al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi-l-anawaliyyah.<sup>43</sup> In addition, upon his father's instruction, Aḥmad al-Hajjām read Aḥmad b. 'Alī b. Mas'ūd's Kitāb Marāḥ [al-Arwāḥ], a work on Arabic morphology with Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī together with other works that az-Zabīdī authored. As we shall see later, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī was also one of al-Falimbānī's teachers.

Among the works that al-Falimbānī read and studied with Ahmad al-Hajjām were al-Bukhārī's (d. 256/870) al-Jāmi' as-Ṣaḥīḥ, and Ibn 'Aṣā' Allāh's (d. 709/1309) al-Ḥikam (or the Aphorisms) and al-Taṣwīf fī Isqāṭ al-Tadhīr, both renowned works on Sūfism.<sup>44</sup>

Thus, it is obvious that al-Falimbānī had intensive contacts with Yemeni scholars, in particular, those from Zabīd and through them he further had extensive scholarly links not only to earlier generations of 'ukamā' of Yemen, but also of al-Ḥaramayn and Egypt.

Mecca

It appears that after studying in Yemen, 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī continued his journey to study in al-Ḥaramayn. His known teachers in Mecca include many eminent scholars of the holy city at the time. Among them was [Abū al-Makārīm] Sālim b. 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī ash-Shāfi'ī al-Makkī (d. 1160/1747), who was the son of the renowned Meccan muhaddith 'Abd Allāh b. Sālim b. Muḥammad b. 'Isā al-Baṣrī al-Makkī (1049-1134/1639-1722), originally from Baṣrah, Iraq.<sup>45</sup> Though his biographer gives no information on his date of birth, Sālim was born in Mecca and most likely in the late seventeenth century.

Sālim al-Baṣrī, like his father, 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, was known mainly as a traditionist muhaddith. He studied mostly with his father and inherited his knowledge. Thus al-Ḥaḍrāwī remarks that 'God cast the barakah on his son' [Sālim], and likewise he was an authority in ḥadīth that he was known as a muhaddith and faqīh.<sup>46</sup> It is important to note Mirdād's view that 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī was one of the three Meccan scholars who possessed 'uhw al-ismād' (superior ismād) which later generations of scholars from al-Ḥijāz, Yemen, Egypt and Syria generally include them in their ismāds,<sup>47</sup> and was also known as one of the 'seven ḥadīth experts of al-Ḥijāz' (masānid al-Ḥijāz as-sab' ah).<sup>48</sup>

Undoubtedly, 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī had established the reputation of the al-Baṣrī family in scholarly circles in al-Ḥaramayn. Thus, through his father, Sālim al-Baṣrī was connected with such scholars as Shams ad-Dīn Muḥammad b. 'Alā' ad-Dīn al-Bābī (d. 1077/1666), Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Laṭīf al-Bashbīshī (d. 1096/1684), 'Isā b. Muḥammad ath-Tha'ālībī al-Maghribī (d. 1080/1669), 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Muḥammad az-Zamzamī (d. 1072/1661), Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī (d. 1101/1690), Zayn al-'Ābidīn (d. 1078/1667) and 'Alī (d. 1070/1659), both sons of 'Abd al-Qādir b. Muḥammad aṭ-Ṭabarī (d. 1033/1624), and the Qāḍī Tāj ad-Dīn b. Aḥmad better-known as Ibn Ya'qūb (d. 1066/1656).<sup>40</sup> It is worth noting that most of these scholars were also teachers of al-Falimbānī's Jawāb predecessors such as 'Abd ar-Ra'ūf as-Sinkīlī (1024-1105/1615-1693) and Muḥammad Yūsuf al-Maqassārī (1037-1111/1627-99), or at least had scholarly contacts with them.

Among Sālim al-Baṣrī's disciples apart from al-Falimbānī were the renowned muhaddith of Medina, Muḥammad Ḥayāt as-Sindī, who also studied directly with 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī;<sup>41</sup> Muḥammad b. Šādiq as-Sindī or Abū al-Ḥasan as-Sindī aṣ-Šaghīr (1125-87/1713-73), who was also a student of Ḥayāt as-Sindī. Moreover, the Islamic reformer who has been called 'the greatest intellectual Muslim India produced,' Shāh Walī Allāh Aḥmad b. 'Abd ar-Raḥīm ad-Dihlawī (1114-76/1703-62), had also met and studied with Sālim al-Baṣrī during his visit to al-Ḥijāz from 1143/1730 to 1145/1732.<sup>42</sup> Shāh Walī Allāh in his hope to restore the 'ulamā's former power and influence had urged Muslim rulers to a jihād against the Maratha and Jat Bharatpur enemies of Islam.<sup>43</sup>

Sālim al-Baṣrī died in Mecca and Mirdād quotes ash-Shaykh al-Qaṭṭān, who related in his Tauzīl ar-Raḥmāt that his death occurred on 2 Muḥarram 1160/14 January 1747, and that he was buried at the al-Ma'lā burial ground in the Holy City. He was survived by his four sons: Ḥasan, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān, Abū al-Faṭḥ and 'Abd al-Qādir; however, none of them, according to Mirdād, were learned (ālim) or seekers of knowledge.<sup>44</sup> Therefore, from his year of death, we can deduce that al-Falimbānī, being his student, must have studied in Mecca with him before 1160/1747.

Al-Katībī states that among Sālim al-Baṣrī's works was a ṭabaṭ entitled al-Imād Bī-Ma'rīfat 'Uluw 'l-Isnād, an abridged version of his father's ṭabaṭ carrying the same caption, completed in 1126/1714.<sup>45</sup> Among the works that al-Falimbānī studied and read with him were the Sunan of Ibn Mājah (d. 273/886), one of the major Six canonical ḥadīth books, and al-Jārabardī's (d. 746/1345) commentary on ash-Shāfiyuh, a work on Arabic morphology by the outstanding master grammarian Ibn al-Ĥalīb (d. 646/1248).<sup>55</sup>

The next teacher of al-Falimbānī in Mecca, Sayyid [Abū] [Iaḥ] 'Umar b. Aḥmad b. 'Aqīl b. Abī Bakr b. Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān Āli Bā 'Alawī b. 'Aqīl b. Abī Bakr as-Sakrān al-Ḥusaynī al-'Alawī al-Makkī ash-Shāfi'ī, better-known as as-Saqqāf (d. 1174/1760), was undoubtedly an important scholar in Mecca.<sup>56</sup>

'Umar as-Saqqāf was the grandson of Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr b. 'Aqīl as-Saqqāf (d. 1074/1663), a student of the aforementioned famous Egyptian muḥaddith Muḥammad b. 'Alā' ad-Dīn al-Bābīlī. He was also the maternal grandson (siḥf) of the above-mentioned eminent Meccan muḥaddith 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, who as we have already mentioned, was also a student of al-Bābīlī.<sup>57</sup>

Born in Mecca in 1102/1690, 'Umar as-Saqqāf studied with numerous scholars of al-Ḥaramayn and became an expert in various branches of Islamic knowledge, but was mainly known as a great muḥaddith. His student Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, eulogised him as 'al-imām al-muḥaddith al-muwad shaykh al-ḥadīth in Ḥijāz, and the star of the religion (najm ad-dīn).'<sup>58</sup>

In addition to studying with 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, 'Umar as-Saqqāf gained a great deal of benefit from eminent scholars in al-Ḥaramayn, such as Aḥmad an-Nakhīlī, Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī, Tāj ad-Dīn b. 'Abd al-Muḥsin al-Qal'ī (d. 1149/1736) who was the Qāḍī and muftī of Mecca, 'Abd al-Qādir b. Abī Bakr aṣ-Ṣiddīqī (d. 1138/1725), Ibn 'Aqīlah, Idrīs b. Aḥmad al-Yamānī, 'Abd al-Waḥhāb b. Aḥmad aṭ-Ṭanjāwī (d. 1154/1741), and Muṣṭafā b. Fath Allāh al-Ḥamawī (d. 1124/1712) originally from Ḥamāh in Syria.<sup>59</sup> The latter, according to al-Kattānī was perhaps the master of the highest tsu'ūd among all of them.<sup>60</sup> Under the guidance of his maternal grandfather al-Baṣrī, in 1110/1698 at the age of eight, 'Umar as-Saqqāf received the al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-awwalīyyah, highly, from the Egyptian scholar Shihāb ad-Dīn Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Ghanī ad-Dimyāṭī (d. 1117/1705 in Medina), better known as Ibn 'Abd al-Ghanī or al-Bannā'. In turn, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī later received this ḥadīth from 'Umar as-Saqqāf when he met him in Medina in 1163/1749. One year later, in 1164/1750, he adhered to him and devoted himself (kāzama) to studying with him in Mecca.<sup>61</sup>

Among 'Umar as-Saqqāf's students, other than al-Falimbānī and the aforementioned Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, were prominent scholars such as Aḥmad b. Ḥasan al-Jawharī (1096-1182/1684-1768), who, as we shall see later, was also among al-Falimbānī's own Egyptian teachers, Ḥasan b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Jabartī (1110-88/1698-1774), the father of the famous Egyptian historian 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Jabartī, author of Tārīkh 'Ajā'ib al-Āthār, and Shāh Walī Allāh ad-Dihlawī, who relates in his al-Faḡl al-Mubīn fī 'I-Musalsal min Ḥadīth an-Nabī al-Amīn that he received al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'I-awwalīyyah from 'Umar as-Saqqāf.<sup>62</sup> It is important to note that Shāh Walī Allāh was also a disciple of Muḥammad Abū Ṭāhir al-Kūrānī (1081-1145/1670-1733), whom he met in Medina in 1112/1700 and regarded as one of his preferred teachers with whom he studied numerous ḥadīth books and received isnāds for each.<sup>63</sup> Abū Ṭāhir al-Kūrānī in turn studied with the 'five nusnās of al-Ḥijāz' (musnādī al-Ḥijāz al-khammah) of that generation: his own father, Ibrāhīm b. Ḥasan al-Kūrānī, 'Abd Allāh b. Sālim al-Baṣrī, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad an-Nakhīlī, Ḥasan b. 'Alī al-'Ujaymī, and Muḥammad b. Sulaymān ar-Rūdānī.<sup>64</sup>

As for al-Falimbānī, it is through his study with 'Umar as-Saqqāf that he is connected directly to, and received the authority from him to transmit works from the prominent seventeenth century 'ulamā' of Mecca. These include 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī's al-Imdād bi-Ma'rifat 'Uḥw al-Isnād, Aḥmad an-Nakhīlī's Baghyat af-Ṭalībīn li-Bayān al-Akashayikh al-Mnḥaqiqīn al-Mu'tamidīn, and the thaḥat of Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī compiled by his student Tāj ad-Dīn b. Aḥmad ad-Duhhān al-Ḥanaḥī al-Makkī (d. after 1160/1747) (also a teacher of 'Umar as-Saqqāf) entitled Kifāyat al-Mutaḥallī li-aḥwā Zahara wa-Khafia min Ghālib Marwīyyāt al-Musnid ash-Shaykh Ḥasan b. 'Alī al-'Ujaymī al-Ḥanaḥī.<sup>65</sup> Other works that al-Falimbānī studied and read with him include Ibn Mājah's Sanan, and the well known biographies of Hanbalites or Ṭabaqāt al-Ḥanābilah by Abū Ya'ī' lī Ibn al-Farrā' al-Baghdādī (d. 458/1065).<sup>66</sup>

Another important teacher of al-Falimbānī in Mecca was 'Aḡā' Allāh b. Aḥmad b. 'Aḡā' Allāh b. Aḥmad al-Azhārī al-Miṣrī al-Makkī ash-Shāfi'ī, an Egyptian scholar who settled and died in Mecca.<sup>67</sup> None of his biographers gives us his date of birth, but he was born in Egypt and studied at al-Azhar with such scholars, among others, 'Alī ad-Durīr al-Ḥanaflī, Muṣṭafā b. Aḥmad al-'Azizī, 'Ayd (or 'Id) b. 'Alī an-Numrusī (d. 1140/1727), Aḥmad al-Khalīfī, 'Abd al-Wahhāb aṭ-Ṭanṭāwī and Muḥammad ash-Shinnāwī. It appears that sometime after completing his education in Egypt he migrated to al-Ḥaramayn or, in Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī's terms, he resided there (nazīl al-Ḥaramayn) and was very active in teaching in both Mecca and Medina. Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī also includes 'Aṭā' Allāh as one of his own numerous teachers and relates that he finally took up residence in Mecca (tulayyara Makkah) where he died in 1187/1773 at the age of ninety.<sup>68</sup> Thus, 'Aṭā' Allāh must have been born around 1097/1685.

The date of 'Aṭā' Allāh's migration to Mecca is also unknown to his biographers. However, from al-Falimbānī's account in his Zahrat al-Murīd, we can deduce that he must have migrated to Mecca prior to 1178/1765, the year al-Falimbānī completed his work. This is evident from 'Aṭā' Allāh's nishah as al-Falimbānī tells us that among his teachers in Mecca, was Shaykh 'Aṭā' Allāh b. Aḥmad al-Miṣrī al-Azhārī and thenceforth (thumma) al-Makkī. Hence, he had already migrated to Mecca when al-Falimbānī studied with him.<sup>69</sup> In his Zahrat al-Murīd, al-Falimbānī also frequently cites 'Aṭā' Allāh's work entitled al-'Iqd al-Farīd fī Taḥqīq Kalimat al-Tawḥīd (The Unique Necklace on Verification of the Expression of Monotheism), obviously one of his numerous works that he read with him. It is also evident that al-Falimbānī venerates him highly as he calls him "shaykhunā al-'ālim al-'allāmah al-nuḥḥaqqiq al-mudaqqiq" [our deeply learned, meticulous and exacting master].<sup>70</sup> According to al-Falimbānī, in his al-'Iqd al-Farīd, 'Aṭā' Allāh elaborates extensively the two levels of the doctrine of monotheism in Islam: tawḥīd al-khawāṣṣ (monotheism of the elite) and tawḥīd khawāṣṣ al-khawāṣṣ (monotheism of the elite of the elite).<sup>71</sup> This clearly implies excluding the general public from getting involved in the discussion of this doctrine.

His students, other than Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī and al-Falimbānī, also included Abū al-Ḥasan as-Sindī as-Ṣaghīr (d. 1187/1773), Ṣalīh b. Muḥammad al-Fullānī (1166-1218/1752-1803), the West African amphedulith who settled in Medina, and Sulaymān b. Yahyā al-'Abdal (d. 1197/1783).

'Aṭā' Allāh was a prolific author, and a scholar of certain intellectual importance in the scholarly circles. According to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, he is said to have written no less than fifty works most of them dealing with al-ua'qil (rational sciences). His works include: Mawṭi' al-Ḥaḍr wa 'l-Bādī wa-Maqṣad ar-Rāyih wa 'l-Ghādī, Maṭla' al-Barhān min Jawālī' al-Mizān; both works on logic, al-Qawl al-Mu'tabar fī 'Ilm al-Athar, Risālah fī Ādāb al-Balūḥ and Tuhfat Ahl al-'Aṣr bi 'l-Maḥkāt al-'Ashr, al-'Uṣūl al-Muḥimmah min Mawārith al-'Ummah, a copy of which written in his own handwriting dated 1186/1772, which was known to az-Zabīdī; Nihāyat al-Ijāz fī 'l-Ḥaḥiqat wa 'l-Majāz, Nihāyat al-'Arab fī Sharḥ Lāmiyat al-'Arab,<sup>71</sup> Tuhfat al-Khullān bi-Sharḥ Naṣīḥat al-Bkhwān, completed in 1170/1756; and Nafḥat al-ḥid fī Waḥdat al-Wujūd.<sup>72</sup> It is important to note that al-Falimbānī was one of the Jāwī 'ukmā', as we shall see later, who eventually became an expert on the doctrine of waḥdat al-wujūd (Oneness of Being) that he wrote a treatise on this topic entitled Zād al-Muttaqin.

Another Meccan scholar whom al-Falimbānī mentioned in his Zahrat al-Murīd and Sayr as-Sālikin as his teacher was 'Abd al-Ghanī Hilāl al-Muklī.<sup>73</sup> He is [Zayn ad-Dīn] 'Abd al-Ghanī Hilāl b. Muḥammad Hilāl b. Muḥammad Sunbulash-Shāfi'i (d. 1212/1798), a faqīh and muftī of the Shāfi'i School of Islamic jurisprudence in the Holy City.<sup>74</sup>

Though no sources provide us with his year of birth, 'Abd al-Ghanī Hilāl was born in Mecca and studied with its 'ulamā' and eventually became a renowned scholar there, especially as a faqīh. The most significant among his teachers were his own father, Muḥammad Hilāl (d. 1159/1746), who was a student of 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, his uncle, Muḥammad Sa'īd Sunhul (d. 1175/1761), the renowned author of al-Awā'il as-Sunbuliyyah, who was also the Shāfi'i muftī of Mecca, and 'Umar al-Saqqāf (d. 1174/1760), the above mentioned maternal grandson of al-Baṣrī and teacher of al-Falimbānī.<sup>75</sup> 'Abd al-Ghanī Hilāl was appointed as the Shāfi'i muftī in Mecca and students flocked to study with him. His students included prominent scholars of the following generation such as the Damascene muḥaddith, 'Abd ar-Rahmān h. Muḥammad al-Kuzharī, better known as al-Kuzharī aṣ-Ṣaghīr or al-Kuzharī al-Ḥafīd (1184-1262/1770-1846), his own cousin, the Meccan muḥaddith, Muḥammad Ṭāhir b. Muḥammad Sa'īd Sunhul (d. 1218/1803), and Yāsīn b. 'Abd Allāh Mīrghani (d. 1255/1839), the son of 'Abd Allāh h. Ibrāhīm Mirghani al-Mahjūb, a renowned Ṣūfī in at-Ṭā'if. The latter, as we shall see shortly, was also among al-Falimbānī's teachers.

According to al-Falimbānī, his teacher 'Abd al-Ghanī Hilāl was among the 'ulamā'' of Mecca who attended the lectures of the visiting Egyptian Shaykh Aḥmad ad-Damanhūrī during the Ḥajj in 1178/1765. Thus, al-Falimbānī must have studied with him prior to this time as he was already described as 'our master and teacher, the learned, and the praiseworthy' (mawlānā wa-shaykhunā al-'ālim al-fāḥḥ).<sup>77</sup> Though we do not have any information on the subjects that al-Falimbānī studied with him or the works that he read with him, without doubt he must have taken the opportunity to study at least ash-Shāfi'ī's fiqh works with him since he was a faqīh and muftī of the Shāfi'ī School of Islamic jurisprudence in Mecca during that time. 'Abd al-Ghanī's fiqh influence on 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī is strongly reflected in his works. For instance, on the question of silver niṣāb (zakāt) based on weight, al-Falimbānī chose 'Abd al-Ghanī's legal opinion over different scholarly rulings on the same issue.<sup>78</sup>

'Abd al-Ghanī Hilāl died in Mecca. Mirdād points out that according to the handwriting of Muḥammad b. Ḥarnīdah al-Makkī, he died on 21 Sha'bān 1212/8 February 1798 and was interred at al-Ma'lā. This, according to Mirdād was in accordance with his own finding in Thabat al-Kuzbarī.<sup>79</sup>

One of the interesting teachers of al-Falimbānī in Mecca was the visiting Egyptian Shaykh Aḥmad ad-Damanhūrī. [Shihāb ad-Dīn Abū al-'Abbās] Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Mun'im b. Yūsuf b. Ṣiām ash-Shāfi'ī al-Mālīkī al-Ḥanafī al-Ḥanbalī ad-Damanhūrī al-Madhāhibī al-Azhari (1101-92/1690-1778), better known as Aḥmad ad-Damanhūrī, was also evidently one of the most prominent figures in the scholarly circles during the eighteenth century. He was also known as al-Madhāhibī for his knowledge and authority in giving fatwā in all four Sunni legal schools of Islamic jurisprudence.<sup>80</sup>

Aḥmad ad-Damanhūrī was born in 1101/1690 in Damanhūr, Egypt. His student, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī relates that he came as a young orphan without support to study at al-Azhar. With diligence, he devoted himself to learning, and expanded his studies and accomplishments. The 'ulamā'' of the four schools of law granted him authorisation (ijāzah) to teach in all four schools. He had an excellent memory and great knowledge and wrote on various branches of knowledge. He gave fatāwā in accordance with the four schools but he did not put his scholarship and writings to good benefit because of his reluctance to impart them to his students, or to others. Sometimes he would impart useful points to some strangers. Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī regularly attended his lectures at the Ḥusaynī Shrine (al-Mashhad al-Ḥusaynī) in Cairo, but he would admix them with anecdotes and tales of his experiences, to pass the time. After the death of Muḥammad b. Sālim al-Ḥifnī (also known as al-Ḥifnāwī) in 1181/1767, also a teacher of Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, Aḥmad ad-Damanḥūrī was appointed the rector of al-Azhar. The commanding officials (umara') stood in awe of him because he zealously proclaimed the truth, insistent upon enjoining virtue and was generous with his possessions. Kings flocked to him from various regions and brought him sumptuous gifts. Other Egyptian officials, representing the government revered him. Although famous and held in high esteem, he was shy of public sessions and gatherings.<sup>31</sup>

Ad-Damanḥūrī performed the Ḥajj with the official Egyptian contingent in 1177/1763. The Sharīf and 'ulamā' of Mecca came to visit him. He returned to Egypt and Shaykh 'Abd Allāh al-Adkāwī (d. 1184/1770) extolled him in a poem to congratulate him on this occasion. Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī relates that he visited him on Shawwāl 1179/March 1766, in his dwelling in Būlāq, where he kept company with him. He received the ijāzah from Aḥmad ad-Damanḥūrī who handed him his thabat entitled al-Laṭā'if an-Nūriyyah fī 'l-Minaḥ ad-Damanḥūriyyah.<sup>32</sup> According to Khawqir, he is also said to have compiled another thabat entitled al-Kawākib az-Zāhirah fī Āthār Ahl 'l-Ākhirah, which has not been recovered.<sup>33</sup>

At the end of his life, ad-Damanḥūrī became very ill and was confined to his home. He passed away on Sunday, 10 Rajab 1192/4 August 1778. Funeral rites were held at al-Azhar Mosque with an overflow of mourners. His genealogy was read (he was believed to have been the progeny of Abū Muḥammad al-Baṭṭāl al-Ghāzī, a famous Arab Muslim warrior of the third/ninth century) and he was interred in the cemetery of al-Bustān.<sup>34</sup>

In the al-Laṭā'if an-Nūriyyah, Aḥmad ad-Damanḥūrī devotes long passages to providing the list of teachers with whom he studied, the titles of books he studied, along with the isnāds for each of them and the ijāzahs that he received from his teachers. He states that he studied the fiqh books of the four madhāhib in the following order: ash-Shāfi'iyyah, followed by al-Ḥanafīyyah, then al-Mālikīyyah and finally al-Ḥanābilah. His teachers include Shāfi'i scholars such as 'Abd Rabbih b. Aḥmad ad-Dīrī, whom he describes as the 'the most knowledgeable in Shāfi'i fiqh', 'Abd ad-Dā'im al-Ajhūrī, and 'Abd ar-Ra'ūf al-Bashbīshī Sayyid Muḥammad b. Muḥammad as-Salamūnī al-Mālikī, the Shaykh of Malikiyyah who granted him ijāzah dated 16th Ramaḍān 1139/6th May 1727. The Faqīh Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz az-Zayādī al-Ḥanafī granted him ijāzah in Dhū al-Ḥijjah 1140/July 1728, and Aḥmad b. 'Awad al-Mirdāwī al-Maqdisī al-Ḥanbalī granted him ijāzah on 3rd Rabī' al-Ākhir 1140/18th November 1727.<sup>85</sup>

Though ad-Damanhūrī was an Egyptian scholar, it is clear from al-Falimbānī's Zahrat al-Murīd that he studied with him during the above stated visit to Mecca for the pilgrimage.<sup>86</sup> However, it is not impossible that al-Falimbānī also studied with him during his own journey and study in Egypt. In addition, al-Falimbānī points out that several Egyptian scholars also attended ad-Damanhūrī's lectures in Mecca. They included Aḥmad b. Aḥmad as-Siblāwī, better known as Razzah (or Ruzzah) (d. 1180/1766),<sup>87</sup> and Muḥammad al-Fāris ash-Shāfi'i al-Miṣrī.<sup>88</sup> It is not improbable that al-Falimbānī took the opportunity to study with or at least consult them during their stay in Mecca, especially since we know he recognised them as having knowledge and eulogized both as 'al-'ālim al-fāḍil.'

It is evident that Aḥmad ad-Damanhūrī was known as a prolific author on numerous subjects including fiqh or, in az-Ziriklī terms, he was one of the Egyptian scholars who were "al-mukhtirīn min 'l-taṣnīf fī 'l-fiqh wa-ghayrih."<sup>89</sup> Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī provides thirty-five titles, adding that he also wrote numerous small epistles which were not included in his list,<sup>90</sup> while Brockelmann lists twenty-nine of his works.<sup>91</sup> Most of his works deal with fiqh, ḥadīth, tawḥīd, manṭiq, hayāt, tafsīr, niwā'iz (sermons), kahīr and taṣawwuf. They include Kitāb Subḥ al-Rashīd ikā Nafā' al-'Ibād completed in 1162/1748, Idāh al-hinshikāt min Maṭn al-Istī'ārāt, on metaphor, Irsḥād al-Māhir ikā Kawz al-Jawābir, on the 'science of letters and names' ('ilm al-ḥurūf wa 'l-asṡā''), Idāh al-Mubham min Ma'ānī as-Sullam on logic, a fiqh work on the Ḥanafī School of Islamic jurisprudence entitled Tariq al-Ittidā' bi-Ḥikām al-Imāmah wa 'l-Iqtidā', and Ḥilyat al-Jubb al-Maṣūn 'alā 'l-Jawhar al-Maknūn, on rhetoric.<sup>92</sup> Other works which were not listed by his biographers include his Taḥṣīl al-Marām bi 'd-Duā' 'alā 'd-Darwān, and al-Qawl al-Mufīd li-Ma'ānī Durrat at-Tawḥīd,<sup>93</sup> and a work on issues pertaining to the demolition of churches in Cairo.<sup>94</sup> Al-Falimbānī mentioned some of the above listed works in his Zuhrat al-Murīd, which without doubt indicates that he had read them directly with Ahmad ad-Damādhūrī.<sup>95</sup>

An important Meccan teacher of al-Falimbānī was [Abū al-Fawz] Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Laṭīf b. 'Abd as-Salām ar-Ra'īs az-Zubayrī az-Zamzamī al-Makkī (d. 1195/1781).<sup>96</sup> According to the biographical notice on his son Muḥammad Ṣāliḥ (1187-1240/1773-1824), his lineage links him to az-Zubayr, a prominent companion of the Prophet SAW.<sup>97</sup> Ibrāhīm ar-Ra'īs az-Zamzamī was born in Mecca in 1110/1698 and evidently was a prominent scholar from the Zamzamī family.<sup>98</sup>

Ibrāhīm az-Zamzamī's teachers included Ibn 'Aqīlah, Sayyid 'Umar as-Saqāfī, Sālim al-Baṣrī, 'Aṭā' Allāh al-Misrī, Muḥammad b. aṭ-Ṭayyib al-Maghribī (1110-70/1698-1756), Ahmad b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Ashbūlī, with whom he and Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī attended lessons on as-Suyūṭī's al-Jāmi' as-Ṣagḥir, 'Abd Allāh Mīrghānī and 'Abd al-Wahhāb aṭ-Ṭanṭawī al-Aḥmadī. He also studied with visiting scholars to Mecca such as the Egyptians 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. 'Āmir ash-Shubrāwī (1094-1171/1682-1757), 'Umar ad-Da'ūjī, and Ahmad al-Jawharī (1096-1182/1684-1768). Most of these scholars were also among al-Falimbānī's teachers as we can see elsewhere in this chapter.

Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī describes Ibrāhīm az-Zamzamī as the eloquent (al-faṣīḥ, al-mufawwih), Imām and the muw'qqit al-Ḥaram (the scholar of astronomy charged with establishing the exact prayer times) adding that he was well versed in various religious sciences. He was initiated into the Naqshabandiyyah Order through his master 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-'Aydārūs who wrote an epistle in his name entitled Risālat al-Bayān wa 't-Ta'lim li-Mutabā' Millat Ibrāhīm, granting him his ijāzah and providing his isnād in the colophon. He was also initiated into the Khalwatiyyah Order<sup>99</sup> by Shaykh Muṣṭafā al-Bakrī who eventually appointed him as his khalīfah for the opening of dhikr gatherings and the recitation of his midnight litany (Wird as-Saḥar).<sup>100</sup> Under the guidance of the father of the Egyptian historian, 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Jabartī, Ḥasan al-Jabartī (1110-88/1698-1774) during his sojourn in Mecca (1155/1742), Ibrāhīm az-Zamzamī was able to master 'ilm al-falak (astronomy).<sup>101</sup> In 1176/1762, after the death of 'Abd al-Wahhāb at-Taharī, Ibrāhīm az-Zamzamī was appointed the new mufī of the Shāfi'i School of Islamic jurisprudence in Mecca.<sup>102</sup> His son, Muḥammad Sālih (d. 1240/1824) who was also one of Dāwūd al-Faḡānī's teachers, a younger contemporary of al-Falimbānī, also became the mufī of Mecca later.

We have seen that Ibrāhīm az-Zamzamī was a contemporary and a close friend of the famous Egyptian scholar, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī. Their close relationship is evident from the fact that they exchanged ijāzahs and corresponded regularly, and upon his request, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī sent him his exposition of al-Ghazālī's al-Iḥyā' entitled Iḥṣā' as-Sādat al-Muttaqīn from Egypt in 1194/1780.<sup>103</sup> Ibrāhīm az-Zamzamī died in Mecca on 17 Rabī' al-Awwal 1195/13 March 1781 and was interred at al-Ma'īlā.<sup>104</sup>

The last scholar in the list of al-Falimbānī's teachers in Mecca mentioned by 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Aḥḍal was al-'Allāmah Muḥammad Mirdād.<sup>105</sup> My research on Muḥammad Mirdād in several biographical dictionaries of the period under study points to Muḥammad b. Muḥammad Sālih b. Muḥammad Mirdād al-Ḥanafī al-Makkī (d. 1205/1790).<sup>106</sup> He was born in Mecca where he grew up and studied with al-Ḥaramayn scholars. He studied the art of recitation (qirā'at) with Shaykh 'Umar b. 'Alī (who was blind but whose heart was enlightened 'al-bayr hi-qalbil') al-Ḥanafī al-Makkī and studied ḥadīth with al-'Allāmah al-Muḥaddith Abū al-Ḥasan as-Sindī as-Ṣagīr al-Madanī al-Ḥanafī; with ash-Shaykh al-Muḥaddith Muḥammad al-Muṣayliḥī aḍ-Ḍarīr al-Miṣrī, and al-'Allāmah 'Abd ar-Rahmān b. Ḥusayn al-Fattānī al-Makkī al-Ḥanafī. All of these granted Mirdād their ijāzah. Muḥammad Mirdād was later appointed as the Imām (prayer leader) and Khaṭīb (orator) of the Sacred Mosque of Mecca. Since he was an Imām who mastered the art of recitation, we can expect that most probably among the subjects that al-Falimbānī studied with him was the Qur'ān and its recitations. According to al-Bakrī, 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Aḥḍal also later met and studied with Muḥammad Mirdād.<sup>107</sup>

Muḥammad Mirdād apparently built the reputation of the Mirdāds as a noted scholarly family in Mecca. It is important to highlight that most of the members of the Mirdād family occupied the post of 'shaykh al-khuṭabā' wa 'l-a'imma' of the Sacred Mosque in the eighteenth and nineteenth century.<sup>108</sup> Among the most prominent members of the Mirdād family in later periods we find 'Abd Allāh b. Aḥmad Abū al-Khayr Mirdād (1285-1343/1868-1924), who was a Qaḍī, historian, and biographer of Mecca.<sup>109</sup>

In addition to 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī's Arab teachers, according to Shaghīr Abdullah, he also studied with a Jāwī scholar, Muḥammad Zayn b. Faqīh Jalāl ad-Dīn b. Shaykh Kamāl ad-Dīn b. al-Qaḍī Baginda Khaṭīb at-Tarūn Pusir al-Jāwī al-Ashī (from Aceh), who resided in Mecca.<sup>110</sup> Abdullah rightly believes that al-Falimbānī met and studied with him in Mecca.<sup>111</sup>

Taking into consideration the dates and places in which Muḥammad Zayn al-Ashī completed his known works, it is highly plausible that al-Falimbānī studied with him. All of his currently known works were written in Mecca; these include his Bidāyat al-Hidāyah, a translation of as-Sanūsī's Umm al-Barāhīn completed on the 24 of Sha'bān 1170/19 January 1756,<sup>112</sup> Kashf al-Kirām fī Bayān an-Niyyat 'inda Takhīrat al-Iḥrām, completed on 8 Muḥarram 1171/22 September 1757,<sup>113</sup> and Taḥkīq al-Fakīh fī Bayān Ahkām al-Falāq wa 'n-Nikāḥ, completed on 7 Dhū al-Hijjah 1175/29 June 1762, or perhaps even earlier as a manuscript copy seems to indicate an earlier date.<sup>114</sup> As we can see, all of these works were written before al-Falimbānī began writing his first work in 1178/1765; therefore, Muḥammad Zayn al-Ashī was most probably one of his early Meccan teachers who happened to be an established Jāwī scholar in the Holy City.

It is important to note that in the Bidāyat al-Hidāyah, al-Ashī points out that some ignorant people in the Archipelago, who claimed themselves as learned scholars, had accused the Ṣūfīs of heresy and permitted their books to be used as toilet paper. He also warned against the common practice of those ignorant people who only studied for two or three years but had accused undisputed Ṣūfī masters such as the two renowned Medinese walīs, Aḥmad al-Qushūshī and Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī and his own Jāwī predecessor, 'Abd ar-Ra'ūf as-Sinkīlī, of being unbelievers. However, al-Ashī strongly advised his students against reading the complicated works of his three Jāwī predecessors, namely, Hamzah al-Fansūrī, Shams ad-Dīn as-Sumatrānī, and Sayf ar-Rijāl, as he believed there were no proficient Jāwī scholars during his time capable of comprehending their teachings. This, he said, also applies to Arabic works on Sūfism written by earlier Ṣūfīs such as Ibn al-'Arabī's al-Futūḥāt [al-Makkiyyah] and Muḥammad al-Ghauth's al-Jawāhir al-Khams. He further explains that because of the inability of Jāwī scholars to understand the correct Ṣūfī teachings, an author such as Sayyid 'Alawī Ba-Faqīh, in his work entitled an-Nūr al-Mubīn, had declared those who advocated the teachings of these three Jāwī scholars to be unbelievers.<sup>114</sup> It is important to point out that in contradiction to al-Ashī's belief, 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī was one of the Jāwī 'alamā' who advocated the teachings of great Ṣūfīs such as Ibn al-'Arabī, 'Abd al-Karīm al-Jīlī, and others, as well as his Jāwī predecessors such as Shams ad-Dīn as-Sumatrānī and 'Abd ar-Ra'ūf as-Sinkīlī. This, as we shall see later, was because he felt competent enough and had the ability to teach such difficult subjects and explain them to capable adepts.

Among al-Ashī's teachers whom he listed in his work was Shaykh Muḥammad Sa'id al-Makkī.<sup>116</sup> He is most likely to be Muḥammad Sa'id b. Muḥammad Sunbul al-Maḥallātī al-Makkī ash-Shālī'ī (d. 1175/1761 in at-Ṭā'if), a Shālī'ī faqīh and muhaddith who assumed the office of the muftī and teacher at Meccan (tawallā al-iftā' wa 'l-tadrīs bi 'l-Masjid al-Ḥarām).<sup>117</sup>

At-Ṭā'if

The only known teacher of al-Falimbānī in at-Ṭā'if whom he mentioned three times in his Sayr as-Sālikīn was 'Abd Allāh Mīrghani at-Ṭā'ifī.<sup>118</sup> According to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, his teacher, al-Imām al-'Arif al-Quth ['Alīf ad-Dīn, Abū as-Sa'ādah] 'Abd Allāh b. Ibrāhīm b. Ḥasan b. Muḥammad Amīn b. 'Alī Mīrghani al-Ḥusaynī an-Nasafī al-Ḥanafī al-Makkī at-Ṭā'ifī, also known as al-Mahjūb (d. 1207/1792), was a renowned Ḥanafī Ṣūfī who was born and grew up in Mecca, and later moved with his family to at-Ṭā'if in 1166/1752. He traced his genealogy back to Ḥusayn b. 'Alī, grandson of the Prophet SAW.<sup>119</sup>

Among 'Abd Allāh Mīrghānī's teachers, were the two renowned mufaddilīth of Mecca, 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī and Ahmad an-Nakhīlī, and a renowned Ṣāfi walī of his time who was known as Qaṭṭā zamānīh (the pole of his time), namely Sayyid Yūsuf al-Mahdalī with whom he studied and was attached to him all his life.<sup>120</sup> After his teacher's death, Mīrghānī experienced a Divine rapture (jadhbat al-ḥaq), such that, according to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, he received direct intuition from his ancestor the Prophet SAW. Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī further relates that he first met and studied with Mīrghānī in Mecca in 1163/1749, and later in aṭ-Ṭā'if in 1166/1752.<sup>121</sup>

Mīrghānī's prominent students include the aforementioned mufī of Mecca, Ibrāhīm ar-Ra'īs az-Zamzāmī, the West African mufaddilīth who settled in Medina, Ṣāliḥ b. Muḥammad al-Fullānī, and the Yemeni Sulaymān b. Yahyā al-Ahdal.<sup>122</sup> The latter points out that when he sent him a written request for his ijāzah from Zabīd, 'Abd Allāh Mīrghānī wrote him a lengthy reply in a mystical style, dated 2 Dhū al-Hijjah 1167/19 September 1754, which, according to Sulaymān, demonstrated his teacher's strong affiliation with Ṣūfism.<sup>123</sup>

Al-Falimbānī recorded some of 'Abd Allāh Mīrghānī's works that he read. Among them Tauḥīd al-Ḥaqq fī Ḥayyīz al-Farq wa-Faṭḥ al-Muta'ālī fī Waqt Ighfālī, a commentary on 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥaddād's poetic composition entitled 'Ikām ḥab rabbīk,' which, according to al-Falimbānī is a work on Ṣūfism recommended for the mubtadi'ī (novice) travellers on the mystical path.<sup>124</sup> Other works by 'Abd Allāh Mīrghānī which al-Falimbānī would have read include Sawād al-'Ayn fī Sharaf an-Nabīyyīn, completed in 1157/1744, al-Ma jam al-Wajīz fī Ahādīth an-Nabī al-'Azīz, a work on ḥadīth written in 1166/1752, ad-Durrat al-Yatīmāh fī Ba'ḍ Faṣāḥ al-as-Sayyidat al-'Azīmah, written in 1164/1750, which perhaps refers to Fāṭimah the daughter of the Prophet SAW, Mashārīq al-Anwār fī 's-Ṣalāt wa 's-Salām 'alā 'n-Nabī al-Mukhlīr, perhaps a collection of litanies in praise of the Prophet SAW, and two anthologies of Arabic poems, one arranged alphabetically entitled al-'Iqd al-Munazzam 'alā Hurūf al-Ma jam, and the other is 'Iqd al-Jawābir fī Naẓm al-Mafākhir, respectively. Several other works that have not been listed by his biographers include unpublished manuscript copies of his al-Aḥfās al-Qudsiyyah fī Ba'ḍ Manāqib al-Ḥaḍrat al-'Abbāsīyyah. As the title would suggest, this is perhaps a work relating the merits of Ibn 'Abbās, the Prophet's SAW young companion and cousin who was buried in al-Jā'if; lithāf as-Su'adā' bi-Manāqib Sayyid ash-Shuhadā', a work on the virtues of Hamzah b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib, the Prophet's SAW uncle who is known in the Islamic tradition as the 'Master of the Martyrs' (Sayyid ash-Shuhadā'); and a work on Sūfism entitled ar-Risālah al-Mirghaniyyah.<sup>125</sup>

It is worth noting that both 'Abd Allāh Mirghani's sons, Yāsīn (d. 1251/1835) also known as al-Mahjūb, and Abū Bakr were also renowned Sūfī scholars of Mecca.<sup>126</sup>

Jeddah

In addition to 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī's list of teachers as recorded by 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Ahdal, both al-Qannūjī and al-Bayṭār, also include a certain Muḥammad Murād as one of his teachers.<sup>127</sup> According to Azyumardi Azra, Muḥammad Murād of that period points to Muḥammad Khalīl al-Murādī.<sup>128</sup> However, my own research of several biographical dictionaries of the period and other Arabic sources, indicates a different scholar, namely Muḥammad Murād al-Anṣārī as-Sindī. His full name is Muḥammad Murād b. Ya'qūb al-Ḥāfiẓ b. Maḥmūd al-Anṣārī al-Khazraǧī as-Sindī (d. ca. 1201/1786). My investigation of several isālat of al-Falimbānī further reveals that his teacher, Muḥammad Murād with whom he studied, was indeed this Muḥammad Murād al-Anṣārī as-Sindī.<sup>129</sup>

Although there is no specific text that mentions that al-Falimbānī met Murād as-Sindī in Jeddah, based on his domicile and the madrasah where he was teaching, as we shall see shortly, it is highly likely that he studied with him in Jeddah. In addition, Martin van Bruinessen points out that according to oral tradition related to him by Kiai Zen Syukri, a contemporary proponent of the Khalwatiyyah Sammāniyyah Order in Palembang, 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī stopped over in Jeddah on his way to Egypt, where he met and studied initially with Ṣiddīq al-Madani who later introduced him to as-Sammān in Medina. Bruinessen points out that this narration is not available in any written sources.<sup>130</sup> However, if this is acceptable, it shows that al-Falimbānī did study in Jeddah and hence it is highly probable that during his stay he studied there as well with Murād as-Sindī.

Although his year of birth is unknown, what we can gather from biographical notices is that Muḥammad Murād as-Sindī was born to an Indian family in the land of Sindh (now in modern Pakistan), where he grew up and later became its Qāḍī (judge). Although born in India, his genealogy traces his ancestors back to the Medinese Abū Ayyūb al-Anṣārī radī allāhu 'anhu, a companion of the Prophet SAW.<sup>131</sup> Indeed the Anṣārīs are widespread in several Arab, Asian and African urban centres and have produced many prominent scholars.

Muḥammad Murād was also the paternal grandfather of the renowned naḥḍadlīth of Medina in the eighteenth century, Muḥammad 'Ābid b. Aḥmad 'Alī b. Muḥammad Murād b. Ya'qūb al-Ḥāfīz b. Maḥmūd al-Anṣārī as-Sindī (1190-1257/1776-1841), author of the famous thaḥat entitled Ḥaṣr ash-Shāriḥ. Evidently, from his ismāʿ in the Ḥaṣr ash-Shāriḥ, Muḥammad 'Ābid tells us that he studied various branches of Islamic religious disciplines with his uncle Muḥammad Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad Murād, who in turn studied with his father Muḥammad Murād al-Anṣārī as-Sindī. Muḥammad 'Ābid also included his silṣilah in a number of Ṣūfī farīqahs in this work.<sup>132</sup>

Muḥammad Murād's teachers who can be traced from his ismāʿ include Muḥammad Ḥāshim b. 'Abd al-Ghaffār b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Ḥanafī al-Tatwī as-Sindī (d. 1174/1760), who, according to al-Ḥasanī, was an eminent Indian scholar of fiqh, ḥadīth and Arabic language.<sup>133</sup>

An anecdote related by 'Ābid as-Sindī tells us some of Muḥammad Murād's merits which also give us some idea of his Ṣūfism. He relates the following:

I was robed with al-khiṣṣah al-khiḍriyah (al-Khiḍr's cloak) by my uncle Muḥammad Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad Murād al-Anṣārī as-Sindī, who said that he was robed with al-khiṣṣah by his father, al-ʿarif bi-Ḥāḥ (the Gnostic of God) Shaykh Muḥammad Murād b. Shaykh Ya'qūb al-Anṣārī as-Sindī. His father, Murād in turn said that al-Khiḍr had repeatedly clothed him with al-khiṣṣah, and he told his son of his numerous encounters with al-Khiḍr. When he was about to die, he said to my uncle Muḥammad Ḥusayn, "My son, al-Khiḍr had just visited me and bid me farewell, and I have entrusted you to him. He will meet you after the 'aṣr prayer at al-Jāmi' ash-Shāfi'i in Jeddah, and as a sign you will come across a man whose ring and right-hand little fingers are joined together." My uncle then said, "I went to the stated mosque to perform my 'aṣr congregational prayer, and on my exit upon leaving the place, a man as perfectly described earlier approached me: he was dark and tall, and he told me that my father had entrusted me to him. I then kissed his hand sought his blessing." Since then, my uncle used to tell me of his occasional encounters with al-Khāḍir.<sup>134</sup>

Apparently, Muḥammad Murād's grandfather was also a learned scholar and Ṣūfī. According to al-Qunnūjī, his grandfather, Maḥmūd was known as 'Shaykh al-Islām' while Muḥammad Murād himself was a Qāḍī in his hometown in India, and later at the end of his life Muḥammad migrated to the Hijāz. Upon the request of Rayḥān, a minister in Jeddah who built Muḥammad Murād a mosque, a madrasah, and a house, he migrated to Jeddah where he settled and spent the rest of his life. It is not clear when he migrated to Jeddah. However, al-Ḥasanī points out that he was said to have died in Jeddah in 1201/1786 just before the arrival of Rafī' ad-Dīn al-Murādābādī for the Hajj, thus he would have migrated some years before the turn of thirteenth century Hijri.<sup>135</sup>

Muḥammad Murād's students, apart from his own son Muḥammad Ḥusayn as-Sindī and al-Falimbānī, also included another Jāmi' student, Muḥammad 'Āshiq ad-Dīn al-Falimbānī, the grandfather of Muḥammad Azharī al-Falimbānī (the latter was a nineteenth century scholar in Mecca and the author of Baḍī' az-Zamān fī Bayān 'Aqā'id 'l-Imān). In addition to Muḥammad Murād, 'Āshiq ad-Dīn also studied with the two prominent Ṣūfīs Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī and Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān.<sup>136</sup> The last two, as we will see shortly, were among the most influential teachers of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī in Medina. This certainly indicates that 'Āshiq ad-Dīn must have been a contemporary of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad as they both studied with the same teachers who were also famous Ṣūfī masters.

Muḥammad Murād's works included a book in four volumes, which according to al-Ḥasanī contained numerous sections on fiṭwā'id al-Qur'ān (virtues of the Qur'ān), and on ḥadīth and fiqh.<sup>137</sup>

Though Muḥammad Murād took up residence in Jeddah, he is also reported to have travelled frequently to Mecca, especially to perform the Ḥajj, making it possible for al-Falimbānī to have met him there as well.<sup>138</sup> However, since Shaykh Murād had his own mosque in Jeddah and taught in his madrasah, it is highly likely that al-Falimbānī travelled to Jeddah to meet and study with him there.

Medina

According to traditional sources, 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī was said to have studied for thirty years in Mecca and then another five years in Medina. Unfortunately, al-Falimbānī himself does not provide us with exact accounts and dates of his travels and scholarship. However, by carefully examining the contents of his writings and the dates and places he provided when completing them, I was able to work out the dates for his five years of scholarship in Medina. It was between 1181/1767 and 1186/1772.

As we shall see later on (in the discussion of his writings in Chapter Five), it is evident that al-Falimbānī never fails to mention his highly venerated Medinese Ṣūfī master, Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān in his writings written from 1187/1773 onwards, but he does not mention him, not even once, in any of his first three earlier writings written before this date. This certainly indicates that he had not travelled to Medina and hence, had not met or studied with as-Sammān prior to 1181/1767.

Without doubt, as-Sammān was the most highly revered of al-Falimbānī's teachers. This is evident from the manner in which he designates him with numerous titles, such as 'al-quṭb ar-rabbānī wa 'l-'arīf as-ṣunūnī,' 'quṭb al-kawwā, walī ar-raḥmān,' 'quṭb az-zamān, walī al-'irfān,' 'al-walī al-kānūl al-mukammil, khātam ahl al-'irfān,' 'quṭb az-zamān, ghawth al-anām,' 'ustādhanā al-a'zam wa-mulāḥḥannī al-afkham, quṭb al-akwām, ghawth az-zamān, al-'arīf bi-Allāh bilā niza' wa-walī [sic] hilā difā'," and so on.<sup>139</sup>

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm b. Ḥasan b. Aḥmad al-Madanī ash-Shāfi'ī, better known as Muḥammad as-Sammān (1130-89/1717-75), was a renowned Medinese Ṣūfī who was born and died in Medina.<sup>140</sup> He also travelled to Egypt in 1174/1760 where he was warmly received by his father's disciples. Apparently, he did not stay long in Egypt as his student, Ahmad b. 'Abd al-Qādir b. Bakrī al-'Ujaylī, met him in Medina in 1175/1761, receiving al-fudhūl al-musalsal bi 'l-awwaliyyah from him.<sup>141</sup>

Muhammad as-Sammān was initiated into several renowned ṣūfī tariqahs including, among others, al-Qādiriyyah, which he received from his own father 'Abd al-Karīm and Muhammad Abū Ṭāhir al-Kūrānī respectively, an-Naqshabandiyyah, ash-Shādhiliyyah, al-'Ādiliyyah and al-Khalwatiyyah.<sup>142</sup> However, he was mostly known for his affiliation with the al-Qādiriyyah and al-Khalwatiyyah orders. He mastered the al-Khalwatiyyah order under the guidance of the Damascene Shaykh Muṣṭafā b. Karnāl ad-Dīn al-Bakrī (1099-1162/1688-1749), and through persistent training and solitude, he attained the state of illumination (kuṣhf), and was later appointed as al-Bakrī's khalīfah.<sup>143</sup> A branch of this Order was later named after him, known as aṭ-Ṭariqah al-Khalwatiyyah as-Sammāniyyah in Medina and elsewhere, which later gained popularity especially in the Malay world. It is important to note that Muṣṭafā al-Bakrī also had several other prominent disciples who were leading scholars of the eighteenth century. They included Muhammad b. Sālim al-Ḥifnī or al-Ḥifnāwī (1101-81/1689-1767) who founded a branch of the al-Khalwatiyyah Order in Egypt known as al-Khalwatiyyah al-Ḥifnāwiyyah Order and was also appointed as al-Bakrī's khalīfah in Egypt.<sup>144</sup>

Muhammad as-Sammān himself was among the students of the renowned Yemeni saint 'Abd Allāh b. 'Alawī al-Haddād (d. 1132/1719) of Tarfīm, and was a disciple of the two renowned muhaddiths of Mecca, Ahmad an-Nakhllī (d. 1130/1717) and 'Abd Allāh al-Basrī (d. 1134/1722).<sup>145</sup> However, from his date of birth, it is clear that all three scholars must have been his teachers by way of a kind of honorary ijāzah given to him; perhaps requested by his own father, as he was still very young when these two Meccan scholars died.

Other than the aforementioned Muṣṭafā al-Bakrī, as-Sammān also studied directly with a number of prominent scholars of his time. They included, among others, Muhammad ad-Duqqāq ar-Ribāḡī al-Maghribī al-Madanī (d. 1158/1745),<sup>146</sup> Abū Ṭāhir Muhammad b. Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī (1080-1145/1669-1732), Muhammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī al-Madanī (d.

1194/1780), Sayyid 'Alī b. Ibrāhīm al-'Aṭṭār al-'Absī al-Ḥalabī (1106-71/1694-1757), 'Alī b. 'Abd Allāh al-Kurdī ash-Shāmī of Damascus (1074-1179/1663-1765), 'Abd al-Wahhāb b. Aḥmad h. Barakāt al-Aḥmadī at-Ṭanṭāwī al-Miṣrī (d. 1154/1741), Muḥammad Ḥayāt as-Sindī (d. 1163/1749), Muḥammad b. Sūlim al-Ḥifnī, Muḥammad Sa'īd Ḥilāl al-Makkī (d. 1175/1761), Muḥammad Ṭāhir at-Timbukū (originally from Timbuktu in Mali, West Africa), Sayyid 'Aṭīyat Allāh as-Sindī, al-Junayd al-Madanī, Ibrāhīm al-Mashishī, Aḥmad al-Maghribī, and Ḥabīb 'Alawī and Ḥabīb Ḥasan, sons of Sayyid 'Abd Allāh h. 'Alawī al-Ḥaddād.<sup>147</sup>

As a renowned saint of his time, as-Sammān attracted numerous students and disciples. Among his disciples were 'Abd al-Bāqī b. Muḥammad Ṣāliḥ ash-Sha'īb al-Anṣārī al-Madanī (d. after 1236/1821),<sup>148</sup> Muḥammad b. Ḥusayn al-'Alawī al-Jufī (1149-86/1726-73), Muḥammad Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad Murād al-Anṣārī as-Sindī, Ṣāliḥ b. Muḥammad al-'Umarī al-Fullānī (1166-1218/1752-1803), Muḥammad at-Tāwadī Ibn Sūdah (1111-1209/1700-95), 'Abd ar-Raḥmān h. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Maghribī, Ṣiddīq b. 'Umar Khān al-Madanī, who studied with him for nearly twenty-five years, and Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī who relates that he received an ijāzah from him by way of correspondence.<sup>149</sup>

However, according to Ṣiddīq al-Madanī, the most esteemed among as-Sammān's students who benefited greatly from him, in his own terms, "wa-kān min aḥlī talīmīdhatihī akhdhan wa-a'ṣamuhum umūran" was 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Jāwī al-Falimbānī al-Makkī.<sup>150</sup> It is quite clear from Ṣiddīq's statement that 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī had earned the most esteemed position among as-Sammān's disciples.

Al-Falimbānī himself states that among as-Sammān's writings that he read directly with him was his an-Nafaḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah fī Kayfiyyat Suhūk Tarīqat al-Muḥammadiyah. Later, as-Sammān instructed him to read this work again with one of his disciples, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān h. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Maghribī (see below). This an-Nafaḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah, according to al-Falimbānī, contains the entire prerequisites, fundamental elements and guidance for seekers of al-Khalwatiyyah as-Sammāniyyah Order and is strongly recommended to novices seeking this order. Obviously al-Falimbānī attached much value to as-Sammān's an-Nafaḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah, for he relates that he heard it from Ṣiddīq al-Madanī who in turn heard it from 'Abd al-Khalīq al-Mizjājī in Zabīd, another disciple of as-Sammān, who had read this work with Ahmad al-Muqri and related that upon completing his reading that al-Muqri invited the 'ulamā' of Zabīd to attend the concluding ceremony (khatm). During the khatm, al-Muqri was seen by al-Mizjāji to be preoccupied, as if 'drowned' in a state of ecstasy until the khatm was over. Al-Muqri then commented that the author, Shaykh as-Sammān, had attained a very esteemed rank and asked the audience if anyone else sees what he just saw; informing them that he saw the souls of the prophets and saints attending the gathering.<sup>151</sup>

Other writings of as-Sammān that al-Falimbāni listed as having read with the author include 'Uwūd al-Jahwā fi Sha'ni al-Khawāh, Ighāthat al-Lahfān [wa-Mu'ānasat al-Walḥān fi 'dh-Dhikr wa-Ādāhāt wa-Kayfiyyāt], al-Fatāwāt al-Ilāhiyyah fi at-Tawajjuhāt ar-Rāḥiyyah fi 'l-Ilāḥiyyah al-Muḥammadiyyah,<sup>152</sup> Kashf al-Asrār fi-mā Yata'alluq bihi lam al-Qaḥḥār,<sup>153</sup> reported to have been published under the title Risālah fi Sharḥ Ismih al-Qaḥḥār, an-Naṣīḥat al-'Ulwīyyah fi 's-Sādāt al-Aḥdāliyyah, Risālat Asrār al-'Ibādāh, Mawḥid an-Nahī SAW, and Qasīdat Istighāthah wa-Madā'ih.<sup>154</sup> Unfortunately, thus far I have only been able to consult as-Sammān's an-Nafaḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah as the rest remain either undiscovered or inaccessible.

Another work by as-Sammān on Sūfism, which, according to al-Falimbāni, is recommended for the intermediate level of seekers (mutawassif) of the mystical path that he read with his master, was a commentary of Raskān's al-Ilkām by Shaykh al-Islām Zakariyyā al-Anṣārī entitled Fath ar-Raḥmān. He points out that this book was the first book that he read with him.<sup>155</sup> This without doubt also indicates that al-Falimbāni was already an intermediate seeker well equipped to learn difficult and complicated subjects when he started studying with as-Sammān. This also tells us that not only he must have studied thoroughly the exoteric Islamic sciences with several other 'ulamā', but that he had attained a certain stage on the Ṣūfī path before pursuing the esoteric sciences with as-Sammān.

It is clear from his own writings that al-Falimbāni esteemed and revered Muḥammad as-Sammān above all others, calling him his spiritual guide and the 'leader of the saints of his time' (quth al-awliya' hadhā az-zamān), and that he became his most ardent follower and admirer.<sup>156</sup>

As-Sammān died at the time of ḍuḥā (early morning after sunrise) on Wednesday, 2 Dhū al-Ḥijjah 1189/25 January 1776 and was interred at al-Baqī' cemetery in Medina.<sup>157</sup> He was succeeded by his son 'Abd al-Karīm b. Muḥammad as-Sammān, better known as Ibn as-Sammān, who according to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī was also a renowned scholar and ṣūfī master and assumed his position as the Shaykh of al-Khalwatiyyah as-Sammāniyyah Order after his father's death.<sup>158</sup> Among his descendents that can be traced is Shaykh Abū al-Ḥasan b. 'Abd al-Karīm b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm al-Qādirī as-Sammān. Born in Medina in the early thirteenth/late eighteenth century, he lived mostly a solitary life in a garden named al-'Ulyā close to Qurbān, a land reported to have been purchased by his grandfather (Muḥammad as-Sammān) when he reportedly foresaw by way of prescient illumination (al-kashf) that a child will be born to his son at that place. Abū al-Ḥasan was reported to have several miracles and countless supernatural attainments, among them he is said to have known his exact time of death seven days in advance. He died in 1258/1842, and was interred at al-Baqī' in Medina.<sup>159</sup>

According to az-Ziriklī, some of as-Sammān's disciples compiled separate works on his virtues, these include, Durrat 'Iqd Jid az-Zamān fī Manāqib ash-Shaykh Muḥammad as-Sammān, ad-Durrar al-Ḥisān fī Manāqib as-Sammān, Mawāyih al-Karīm al-Mammān fī Manāqib Sidi ash-Shaykh Muḥammad as-Sammān, Manāqib Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān al-Madanī, and Bahjat Dhawī 'L-'Irḡān fī Manāqib Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān.<sup>160</sup>

Without doubt, as-Sammān's reputation and fame as a highly revered walī in Medina also reached the Malay Archipelago, most probably through 'Abd as-Samad al-Falimbānī and his disciples. His manāqib and Rāṭih as-Sammān were widely read throughout the Malay world.<sup>161</sup> As already mentioned in Chapter One, some Jāwī scholars, for instance Muḥammad h. Ahmad Kernas Badr ad-Dīn, who probably was one of al-Falimbānī's students, wrote a book entitled Nafahāt ar-Rahmān fī Manāqib Ustādhinā al-'A'zam as-Sammān, on the virtues (manāqib) and miracles (karāmāt) of as-Sammān. Since this Nafahāt ar-Rahmān also devoted a chapter to numerous karāmāt of as-Sammān reported by his students after his death, it is obvious that it must have been written after his death in 1189/1775.

The next teacher of al-Falimbānī in Medina was 'Abd ar-Rahmān b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-'Umārī ash-Shinqī' al-Maghribī al-Mālikī (d. 1181/1767), who himself was also one of as-Sammān's disciples.<sup>162</sup> Al-Murādī tells us that 'Abd ar-Rahmān ash-Shinqī' originated from Northwest Africa (modern day Mauritania) and settled down in Medina where he taught and died. Al-Murādī adds that he had a blessed breath or spirit (lahu nufas mubārak) over his students that whoever studied with him attained the opening and success in the pursuit of knowledge (ḥaṣal lahu al-futūḥ).<sup>163</sup> According to 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī himself, upon as-Sammān's instruction, he read his aforementioned an-Nafaḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah and al-Burhānpūrī's at-Tuḥfat al-Mursalah with 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Maghribī. Al-Falimbānī also expresses his obvious veneration of 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Maghribī as he designates him with the title 'the knower of God, the learned, the great scholar, the master of both the rational and traditional sciences, and external and internal knowledge' (al-'ārif bi-Allāh al-'ālim al-'akmah al-jāmi' bayna 'ilm al-ma'qūl wa 'l-ma'qūl wa 'ilm aṣ-ṣāhir wa 'l-bāṭin).<sup>164</sup>

Though al-Falimbānī did not mention any of 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Maghribī's writings, we can gather from other sources that a work entitled Tawālī' al-Faḥ compiled in 1180/1766 was ascribed to him.<sup>165</sup>

The next teacher of al-Falimbānī in Medina was Ṣiddīq b. 'Umar Khān al-Madanī, also another disciple of as-Sammān.<sup>166</sup> Though Ṣiddīq al-Madanī may have been a teacher of al-Falimbānī, as he relates that he read several works with him upon as-Sammān's instruction, we shall see shortly from his close relation that he should more appropriately be considered his close colleague rather than teacher.

Unfortunately, even after extensive search, I have not been able to find any biographical dictionary that provides us with a biographical notice on him. However, from Aḥmad 'Abd al-Majīd Harīdī's edition of Ṣiddīq al-Madanī's Qaff Aḥbār al-Mawāhib ar-Rabbāniyyah min Afḥān Riyāḍ an-Nafḥat al-Qudsīyyah, I have been able to gather some biographical details about him. Despite no available records on Ṣiddīq al-Madanī's dates of birth and death, Harīdī tells us that he was born in India as indicated in his own writing, and later travelled to Medina where he met as-Sammān's student, Sayyid Muḥsin Muqaybil. The latter suggested that Ṣiddīq al-Madanī accompany him to meet and take the pledge of allegiance (bay'ah) from Muḥammad as-Sammān. Šiddīq became a devotee of as-Sammān for twenty-five years, probably from the year 1164/1750. He later travelled - after as-Sammān's death - to Sannār in Sudan and studied with Shaykh Muḥammad b. 'Uthmān aṣ-Šayigh as-Sannārī, and to Zabīd where he studied with Shaykh Muḥammad b. 'Uthmān al-Makkī.<sup>167</sup>

Šiddīq al-Madani was reported to have a zāwiyah<sup>168</sup> in Jeddah, a zāwiyah that was named after his teacher as-Sammān known as az-Zāwiyah as-Sammāniyyah, where he died and was buried. The location of this zāwiyah, according to Haridī, can still be identified to this day. As for his karāmāt, Šiddīq al-Madani was reported to have been challenged by seeing Iblīs (the Devil) twice: the first time was in India and the second in al-Ḥaramayn. During a drought in Sannār, Sudan, it was reported to have rained immediately after his invocation and tawassul (supplication to God) through as-Sammān's qayūluh (poem), most probably the earlier mentioned Qaṣīdat Istighāthah wa-Madā'ih.<sup>169</sup>

In a Malay tract on as-Sammān's manāqib (merits) entitled Alamat Surat Manaqib Tuan Syekh Muhammad Saamman Serta Surat Mi'raj, which is still being recited in Banjar, Indonesia up to the present day, Šiddīq al-Madani was also reported to have been the khalīfah (successor) of as-Sammān in Medina.<sup>170</sup>

Among his writings that al-Falimbānī listed were, [al-Futūḥāt] as-Sammāniyyah fī Sulūk al-Wahdāniyyah,<sup>171</sup> aa-Naḥḥat as-Sammāniyyah fī [Maḥāsīn] al-Ṭarīqat al-Qādiriyyah, Murshid al-Ṭullāh ilā Sulūk Ṭarīq al-Aḥbāb, Sharḥ Tawassul Muḥammad as-Sammān, and Kashf al-Astār al-Wahmiyyah 'aa Jamāl Muḥyī aa-Naḥḥat al-Qudsiyyah, a commentary on as-Sammān's poem al-'Ayniyyah.<sup>172</sup> Apparently, all of these titles are writings on Sūfism. Al-Falimbānī himself read al-'Ayniyyah with Šiddīq al-Madani and his commentaries on Muḥallā al-Bakrī's writings on tawḥīd: Tawḥīd al-aḥ'āl, Tawḥīd al-axṣnā', Tawḥīd al-aḥ'qūt and Tawḥīd adh-dhāt after reading the matn (text) of these works with as-Sammān himself. It was in these commentaries, according to al-Falimbānī, that Šiddīq al-Madani included his name in the prologue, perhaps because they were written upon his request.<sup>173</sup>

Although it was upon the instruction of as-Sammān that al-Falimbānī studied and read several works with Šiddīq al-Madani, as I have indicated earlier, he was more of an esteemed colleague than a teacher to him. This evidently can be seen from their close relations, for instance, it was upon al-Falimbānī's request that Ṣiddīq al-Madanī wrote for him his Qaṭf 'Azhār al-Marwāhīb ar-Rabbāniyyah, a commentary on as-Sammān's poem, an-Naḥḥat al-Qudsiyyah, a commentary intended for his fellow Muslims in Palembang. In the prologue of the Qaṭf 'Azhār, Ṣiddīq al-Madanī writes: "be informed O my brethren, that I am a helpless and a weak servant. I was requested by a brother in the ṭarīqah, the Gnostic of God, the divine (ar-rabbānī) our master Shaykh 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Jāwī al-Falimbānī to write a commentary on this al-'aynīyyah poem known as an-Naḥḥat al-Qudsiyyah attributed to our above-mentioned teacher [as-Sammān] who is more known than 'a mountain crowned by light.' He had seen my other commentary on this poem, but it was in esoteric language (al-ḥaqā'iq). Thus, he instructed me to elucidate it in exoteric language (az-ẓāhir) which can be understood by those who are not acquainted with the intricacies of knowledge (ad-daqā'iq). I complied with his request immediately turning to God for help to unbind its symbols."<sup>14</sup>

On the other hand, according to al-Falimbānī, when he himself completed a treatise on waḥdat al-wujūd based on the teachings that he received from as-Sammān, Ṣiddīq al-Madanī was the first to read this work and later gave it the title Zād al-Muttaḥḥin fī Tawḥīd Rabb al-'Ālamīn.<sup>15</sup> Thus, both these occasions clearly reflect the close relations and mutual estimation between Ṣiddīq al-Madanī and 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī as fellow disciples of as-Sammān.

Another teacher with whom al-Falimbānī studied during his sojourn in Medina was 'Abd al-Ghanī b. Abī Bakr b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Fattānī al-Qāsim, who according to him was better known as 'al-'Ālim aṣ-Ṣūfī al-Hindī al-Madanī.<sup>16</sup> According to Ṣiddīq al-Madanī, 'Abd al-Ghanī originated from India and purposely travelled to Medina to meet and study with as-Sammān. He adhered to as-Sammān for the whole duration of his sojourn in Medina where he later died and was buried in al-Baqī' cemetery.<sup>17</sup> Unfortunately Ṣiddīq al-Madanī did not provide us with details of the year of his arrival, duration of his sojourn in Medina or the year of his death.

Al-Falimbānī himself tells us that he read with 'Abd al-Ghanī his book entitled Faṭḥ ar-Raḥmān, an exposition of as-Sammān's Risālat

Awār al-'Ibādāt, and several other writings on Sūfism (which he does not specify) upon the instructions of as-Sammān.<sup>178</sup> Thus, it is clear that he met and studied with him in Medina and during the lifetime of as-Sammān, i.e. before 1189/1775, which is the date of the latter's death.

Another renowned scholar with whom al-Falimbānī studied during his sojourn in Medina was Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī al-Madanī ash-Shāfi'ī (1127-94/1715-80).<sup>179</sup> He was born in Damascus, and at the age of one was brought to Medina, where he grew up and mastered both al-'ilm an-naqlī (traditional Islamic sciences) and al-'ilm al-'aqlī (rational sciences). He was also known to be a faqīh (jurist) and was appointed as the mufī of the Shāfi'ī School of Islamic jurisprudence in Medina.<sup>180</sup>

Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī studied with prominent scholars of his time, including his father Sulaymān, Muḥammad Sa'īd Sunbul, the then Shāfi'ī mufī of Mecca, whose lecture at the Prophet's Mosque in Medina he attended on the 2nd Dhū al-Qa'dah 1170/19th July 1757 and from whom he narrated al-Awā'il as-Sunbuliyyah.<sup>181</sup> Muḥammad al-Kurdī's teachers also included Yūsuf al-Kurdī, Abū Tāhir al-Kūrānī, Aḥmad al-Jawharī, Muṣṭafā al-Bakrī, the famous Master of al-Khalwatiyyah Order, among others.

Among his students other than 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī himself, were his son 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Kurdī and other prominent scholars, such as the Shāfi'ī Tarch-Musūds of Aḥl al-Bayt: Zayn al-'Ābidīn b. 'Alawī Jamāl al-Layl al-Madanī (d. 1235/1819), 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Sulaymān al-'Abdal, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, the renowned muhaddith Ṣāliḥ al-Fullānī, and the two Damascene muhaddiths Muḥammad Shākir al-'Aqqūd (d. 1222/1807), and Muḥammad al-Kazbarī (d. 1221/1806). They also included a number of other previously mentioned scholars such as the eminent Sūfī Master, Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān himself, Muḥammad b. Sālim al-Ḥifnī, and the reformer and founder of the Wahhābī movement, Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Wahhāb (d. 1206/1792) who was also a student of the Indian muhaddith of Medina, Muḥammad Ḥayāt as-Sindī.<sup>182</sup>

'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī obviously venerated Muḥammad al-Kurdī highly as he eulogised him as "Shaykhunā al-'ālim al-'allāmah al-'āmil bi-'ilmilī Mawlānā ash-Shaykh Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī al-Madanī al-mufī fī 'l-Mudīnah al-Munawwarah" (Our teacher, the savant, the great scholar, the one who practices in accordance with his knowledge, our master, Shaykh Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī al-Madani, the muftī in Medina).<sup>161</sup> He retained his position as the muftī until he died on 16th Rabi' al-Awwal 1194/20th March 1780 at the age of sixty-seven.<sup>162</sup>

Among al-Kurdī's writings was al-Ḥawāshī al-Madaniyyah 'alā Sharḥ al-Muqaddimah al-Ḥaḍramiyyah ['alā 'I-Minhāj al-Qawīm], 'Uqūd ad-Durar fī Bayān Muṣṭalahāt Tuhfat Ibn Hajar, both based on fiqh commentaries by Ibn Hajar al-Haytamī, with the latter explaining technical terms found in his famous Tuhfat al-Muhtāj. Al-Kurdī's writings also include al-Fawā'id al-Madaniyyah fī-man Yuftā bi-Qawlihi min A'imnat ash-Shāfi'iyyah, on Shāfi'i muftīs, Kāshif al-Lithām 'an Ḥukm al-Tajarrud Qaḥl al-Muqāt hilā Ḥirām, on aspects of the pilgrimage, ath-Thaḡir al-Bassām 'an Ma'āni as-Sawar allatī Yuzawwij fihā al-Ḥukkām, on the use of certain verses of the Qur'ān as source of jurisprudence, Sharḥ 'alā Manzūmat an-Nāsikh wa 'I-Mansūkh, a commentary on a collection of poems on those verses of the Qur'ān which abrogate and are abrogated, Zahr ar-Rubā fī Bayān Ahkām ar-Ribā, on clarifying the law of usury, al-Intibāḥ fī Ta'jīl as-Salah, on attentiveness regarding the hastening of prayers, Kashf al-Murūt 'an Muḥdhirāt mā-lī 'I-Wuḍū' min 'sh-Shurūt, on the conditions of ablution, Fatāwā al-Kurdī, and ad-Durrat al-Bahīyyah fī Jawāb al-As'īlat al-Jāwiyyah.<sup>163</sup> The latter, was written to answer questions posed by his Jāwī students, which signifies the attention given by scholars of al-Ḥaramayn to Jāwī issues. However and unfortunately, I have not been able to locate copy of this work. From the entire list, most of Muḥammad al-Kurdī's works deal with fiqh, which further indicates his expertise in this field, although he is usually counted as a Ṣūfī above all.

Another scholar who should be included among al-Falimbānī's teachers was Mushayyakh Bā-'Ubūd.<sup>164</sup> According to al-Ḥaḥshī, he is Mushayyakh h. Zayn Bā-'Ubūd al-'Alawī (d. 1170/1756). He was born in Ḥaḍramawt, Yemen and later, around 1115/1703 migrated to Medina.<sup>165</sup> Among Mushayyakh's best-known teachers in Yemen were the earlier mentioned Tarīm saint 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥaddād and Aḥmad h. Ḥāshim h. Aḥmad al-Ḥaḥshī, with both of whom he studied exoteric and esoteric sciences, both clothed him with the Ṣūfī cloak (al-khirqah) and initiated him into al-'Alawīyyah Order. He also studied with 'Abd ar-Rahmān b. 'Abd Allāh Balfaqīh in Medina, who in turn studied with prominent 'ulamā' such as Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī, Muḥammad b. 'Abd ar-Rasūl al-Barzanjī, Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī, Aḥmad an-Nakhfī, and 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī; the last two, with whom Mushayyakh also studied directly. He can also be included among the students of the renowned Ḥanafī Ṣūfī shaykh, 'Abd al-Cihānī an-Nābulusī of Damascus (d. 1143/1731), by way of correspondence (nurṣalah). Al-Ḥabshī points out that according to Ṣūfī mystical expression, Mushayyakh Bā-'Uḫūd met an-Nābulusī spiritually (al-ijtimā' ar-rūḥānī).<sup>188</sup>

Among the writings on Islamic discipline that al-Falimbānī read with Mushayyakh were Sunan Ibn Mājah on ḥadīth, and Ḥāshiyat Sharḥ al-Jāmi' 'alā al-Kāfiyah, an extensive gloss on 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Jāmi's (d. 898/1492) Fawā'id Wāfiyah fī Ḥall Mushkikāt al-Kāfiyah, a commentary on Ibn al-Ḥājib's (d. 646/1249) Kāfiyat Dhawī al-Ādāb fī 'Ilm Kalām al-'Arab, a concise textbook on Arabic grammar and syntax.<sup>189</sup>

The last from the list of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī's teachers in Medina is 'Āqib b. Ḥasan ad-Dīn. According to al-Fādānī, he is 'Āqib b. Ḥasan ad-Dīn b. Ja'far b. Muḥammad b. Badr ad-Dīn al-Falimbānī as-Sumatrānī al-Madānī (d. ca. 1182/1768), the most learned of the Jāwī 'ulamā' who possessed the most numerous isnāds and the widest transmissions (aktharuhum isnādau wa-awṣā'uhum riwāyatan), to an extent that he was known as an authority on ḥadīth, Qur'ān and jurisprudence (al-muḥaddith al-ḥāfiẓ al-faqīh). 'Āqib had his numerous isnāds recorded in his two thabats, entitled Thabat Ṣaghīr and Mu'jam Shuyūkh al-Ḥāfiẓ 'Āqib al-Falimbānī.<sup>190</sup> However, it is unfortunate that even after extensive search I have not been able to locate any copies of these works. Nevertheless, the fact that 'Āqib had numerous isnāds and narrated extensively is certainly indisputable as we learn that most of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad's isnāds pass through him.<sup>191</sup>

Although I haven't been able to find any mention of him in biographical dictionaries, 'Āqib was, according to al-Fādānī, one of the Jāwī scholars who migrated to Medina and was bestowed with a long life (al-mu'a'mmar) living for more than ninety years, dying in Medina around 1182/1768. Al-Fādānī points out that 'Āqib studied directly with

Muhammad as-Sammān, and received several Islamic sciences by way of ijāzah from both 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī and Ahmad an-Nakhli.<sup>192</sup> It was believed that 'Āqib once owed a large sum of money and was unable to repay his debt. He then said to himself that if as-Sammān was indeed a true walī, then through him God would definitely release him from his burden. In less than a year, he was said to have been able to pay back all his debt, which he attributed to the kurānūt of as-Sammān.<sup>193</sup>

'Āqib's list of teachers, according to al-Fādānī, also included scholars such as the aforementioned muftī of Medina, Muhammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī, Muhammad Sa'id Sunbul, Ibn 'Aqilah, Muhammad b. Sulṭān al-Walidī (d. 1134/1721), Muhammad b. Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī, 'Alī b. 'Abd al-Barr al-Wanālī, 'Abd al-Ḥāfiẓ b. Darwish al-'Ujaymī, the qāfi and muftī of Mecca, Sālim b. 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, and 'Abd ar-Rahmān b. Ahmad an-Nakhli, the sons of the two above mentioned renowned muhaddith of Mecca, 'Umar b. 'Aqil as-Suqqāf, Amr Allāh b. 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Mizjāji, Jarjis (or Jirjis) b. Ahmad Afandī, Ḥasan b. 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Jabartī, and 'Abd al-Majīd b. 'Alī al-Manālī, better known as az-Zayādī al-Ḥasanī al-Idrīsī.<sup>194</sup> It is worth noting that Muhammad al-'Ujaymī and 'Abd al-Ḥāfiẓ al-'Ujaymī were the son and grandson of Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī respectively.<sup>195</sup>

It is important to point out that many other members of 'Āqib's family are also included among the Jāwī scholars who took up residence in al-Ḥaramayn. They include for instance, his brother Šāliḥ, his father Ḥasan ad-Dīn, his uncle Ṭayyib, and his grandfather, Ja'far b. Muhammad b. Badr ad-Dīn al-Falimbānī. The latter was a ḥadīth scholar who studied with, among others, the earlier mentioned famous Egyptian scholar Shams ad-Dīn Muhammad b. al-'Alā' al-Bābīlī. It is highly likely that he met and studied with al-Bābīlī during his regular visits to al-Ḥaramayn where he performed the hajj and stayed for a while to teach. His grandfather Ja'far died in Mecca in 1128/1715.<sup>196</sup>

In addition to 'Abd as-Šamad, 'Āqib's students also included Muhammad Šāliḥ b. Ibrāhīm ar-Ra'īs az-Zamzamī (1187-1240/1773-1824), the muftī of Mecca and the son of the earlier mentioned al-Falimbānī's Meccan teacher, Ibrāhīm b. Muhammad ar-Ra'īs az-Zamzamī, the Meccan muhaddith, Abū Ḥafṣ 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Karīm

b. 'Abd ar-Rasūl al-'Aẓẓār (d. 1249/1833), Sulaymān al-Ahdal and his son, 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Ahdal.<sup>197</sup>

However, though 'Āqib was a teacher of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī and a student of as-Sammān, apparently he had to take the pledge of allegiance (bay'ah) for initiation into al-Khalwatiyyah as-Sammāniyyah Order from 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad instead of as-Sammān himself. According to the jarīdah sikkah of Muḥammad Azharī b. 'Abd Allāh al-Falimbānī, he received the talqīn for the membership of the al-Khalwatiyyah as-Sammāniyyah Order from 'Abd Allāh h. Ma'rūf al-Falimbānī, who in turn received it from Muḥammad 'Āqib b. Ḥasan ad-Dīn al-Falimbānī, who received it from 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī, who in turn took the Order from Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān, who in turn received it from Muṣṭafā al-Bakrī, and so forth to the Prophet SAW.<sup>198</sup> This is probably because 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad had been appointed by as-Sammān as his khalīfah and hence the bay'ah had to be done through him. This without doubt reflects 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad's esteemed position as one of as-Sammān's closest ṣūfī disciples, especially in the esoteric sciences, as he was appointed as his khalīfah he was entrusted by his teacher to initiate others, including his own teacher 'Āqib into this Order.

Perhaps, because of 'Āqib's initiation into the Order by 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad, modern scholars have mistakenly assumed he was his student. For instance, from the aforementioned sikkah, Shaghīr Abdullah believes that 'Āqib was a student of 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad instead of his teacher.<sup>199</sup> However, from the numerous Islamic sciences that 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad studied with 'Āqib, it is obvious that he was his student and not his teacher. In addition, it is customary for traditional Islamic scholars to acquire knowledge from, or exchange ṭawāds (tadabbuṭ) with his peer or his student or a junior colleague. Such practices, according to Ḥusayn al-Ḥibshī, have ancient origins. For instance, he said this is exemplified by the Prophet SAW himself when he stood on the pulpit and said, "Tamīm ad-Dārī reported to me" on his account of ad-Dajjāl (anti-Christ).<sup>200</sup> Thus, 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad was 'Āqib's student in traditional Islamic traditions, but 'Āqib was his spiritual disciple in the ṣūfī tradition, specifically in the Sammāniyyah Order.

Among the various branches of Islamic disciplines that 'Abd as-Šamad studied with 'Āqib were ḥadīth, as-siyar wa 'l-mughāzī wa 'l-shamā'īl (history, account of the Prophet's campaigns, and a collection of traditions on the traits of the Prophet SAW), tafsīr, 'ulūm al-Qur'ān, 'ulūm al-ḥadīth, tawḥīd, fiqh and usūl al-fiqh, balāgh (rhetoric), naḥw, ṣarf, taṣawwuf, tawārīkh and jabaqāt (Islamic history and biographies). It is worthwhile noting that among the works on taṣawwuf he read with 'Āqib was Ibn al-'Arabī's al-Futūḥāt al-Makkiyyah. This reflects 'Āqib's intellectual competency as a teacher of both exoteric and esoteric Islamic sciences.<sup>201</sup> However, from the Islamic literatures which 'Abd as-Šamad mainly read with him, it is clear that what he learned from him apparently were sciences, promoting an intellectual understanding of Islam rather than a spiritual or mystical one. In other words, 'Āqib was an intellectual teacher for 'Abd as-Šamad al-Falimbānī, while on the other hand as-Sammān, as shown earlier, was his spiritual and mystical master; and 'Abd as-Šamad was the initiator of 'Āqib into the Sammāniyyah ṭarīqah.

Al-Falimbānī's Learning Centres Outside The Arabian Peninsula

It has been generally assumed by modern scholars that 'Abd as-Šamad al-Falimbānī's scholarly travel and sojourns were confined to the Arabian Peninsula region. However, careful examination of the sources would suggest that al-Falimbānī travelled to Egypt and Syria studying with notable scholars from both Cairo and Damascus.

Using the isnād works of al-Fādānī as a primary source, there is evidence that al-Falimbānī most probably studied in both Egypt and Syria. He certainly had several teachers from these regions. His Egyptian teachers mentioned by al-Fādānī include Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ al-Mujirī al-Mullawī, Aḥmad b. Ḥasan al-Khalīdī al-Jawharī, his son, Muḥammad al-Jawharī, Dāwūd b. Sulaymān al-Kharībī al-Miṣrī, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Muṣṭafā al-'Aydārūs, Muḥammad Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī al-Miṣrī, and 'Alī b. 'Abd al-Barr al-Wanā'ī. Furthermore, I was able to trace his teachers from Damascus, Ḥalab (Aleppo) and other parts of Syria-Palestine. None of these have been mentioned by modern scholars. They were Aḥmad b. 'Ubayd al-'Aḡār, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad as-Saḡlārīnī (from Palestine), Muḥammad b. 'Uṭhmān al-'Aqīlī al-'Iḡalabī al-'Umārī, 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Qādir al-Armanāzī al-'Iḡalabī. This is in addition to Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Hilālī as-Sijilmāsī, who hailed originally from Morocco.

Egypt

It was probably while studying in Mecca that al-Falimbānī, together with other Jānī compatriots including Muḥammad Arshad al-Banjārī, 'Abd al-Wahhāb al-Buḡisī, and 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Batāwī al-Miṣrī also travelled to Egypt to study with its scholars. Though we do not have evidence on when such travel to Egypt may have happened, it would appear from the list of the Egyptian teachers whom al-Falimbānī came in contact with and the report of his travels from his traditional account, that he studied in Egypt.<sup>203</sup> This conclusion is in accord with al-Fādānī's report when he points out that al-Falimbānī received his instructions in Egypt from, among others, the two Shihābs: Aḥmad al-Mullawī and Aḥmad al-Jawharī (wa-rawā 'Abd as-Samad ... bi-Miṣr 'an 'sh-Shihābayn, Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ al-Mullawī wa-Aḥmad b. Ḥasan al-Jawharī).<sup>204</sup> Perhaps it was because of their sojourn in Egypt that his colleague, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Batāwī, following the traditional custom for Islamic scholars to adopt a nisbah of a particular place due to their stay in that place, adopted the nisbah al-Miṣrī (the Egyptian).

One of the Egyptian scholars with whom 'Abd as-Samad al-Falimbānī studied was Aḥmad al-Mullawī (1088-1182/1677-1767).<sup>205</sup> His full name was Shihāb ad-Dīn Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ b. Yūsuf b. 'Umar al-Mujirī ash-Shāfi'ī al-Azhārī, more commonly known as Aḥmad al-Mullawī. His ancestors originated from Ḥama (Ḥamāh) on the Orontes River in central Syria. According to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, on the authority of al-Mullawī himself, he was born at dawn (ḡaḡr) on Thursday, 2 Ramaḍān 1088/28 October 1677 in Cairo. He studied at al-Azhar and was later known as the shaykh ash-shaykh (Grand Master) and mursnid al-waqt (isnād-expert of his time).<sup>206</sup>

Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī includes al-Mullawī among the first generation (aṭ-ṭabaqat al-ūlā) of his own teachers who in turn had met and studied with 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, Aḥmad an-Nakhlī, Aḥmad al-Ḥannā' and Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī. This group also included al-Mullawī's fellow scholars, Aḥmad b. Ḥasan al-Jawharī (d. 1182/1768), who as we shall see shortly was also one of al-Falimbānī's teachers, 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. 'Āmir ash-Shubrāwī (d. 1171/1757), Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Mun'im ad-Damanḥūrī (d. 1192/1778), whom al-Falimbānī met and studied with in Mecca, and Sābiq b. Ramaḍān b. 'Arām az-Za'balī (1068-1182/1657-1768). The latter, according to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, also met Muḥammad b. 'Alī' ad-Dīn al-Bābī (d. 1078/1667).<sup>206</sup>

Aḥmad al-Mullawī travelled to al-Ḥaramayn in 1122/1710 where he met and studied with the two muḥaddiths of Mecca, 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī and Aḥmad an-Nakhlī. He received al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-awwalīyyah from both, read with them the opening chapters of the six ḥadīth canonical books (aww 'l-al-kutub as-sittah), and was later granted their licence (ijāzah). During his sojourn in Mecca, al-Mullawī also took the opportunity to meet and study with Ilyās b. Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī (1047-1138/1637-1726), Idrīs al-Yamānī, and Abū Ṭāhir Muḥammad al-Kūrānī. He was included among the students of the latter's father, Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī by way of general ijāzah (al-ijāzah al-'āmmah).<sup>207</sup>

In an unpublished copy of his Thabat, Aḥmad al-Mullawī provides us with a comprehensive list of his teachers, the various branches of Islamic disciplines he studied and the books he read with them, together with his imāds to these works. Among his teachers were Shāfi'ī scholars such as Aḥmad b. al-Faqīh, 'Ayd b. 'Alī an-Numrusī, 'Abd ar-Ra'ūf al-Bashbīshī, and 'Abd Rabhīh b. Aḥmad ad-Dīwī; and Mālikī scholars of Maghribī origin, such as Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. 'Abd Allāh al-Warḥūzī, 'Umar b. 'Abd as-Salām at-Tiṭwānī, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. Dāwūd as-Sanūsī al-Ḥashtūkī, and 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Maghribī al-Qaṣarī al-Kanaksī.<sup>208</sup>

Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī relates that he himself first attended Aḥmad al-Mullawī's teaching sessions at al-Jāmi' al-Azhar in 1167/1754 when al-Mullawī gave lectures on 'Alī al-Aḥmūnī's (d. 929/1522) commentary on Ibn Mālik's (600-72/1204-73) al-Alfiyyah on Arabic grammar. This was later followed by a visit to his house on Friday, 22nd Rabi' ath-Thānī

1167/15<sup>6</sup> February 1754 where he received the ḥadīth al-awwalīyyah together with a "general and a specific licence" (ijāzah 'āmmah khāṣṣah) from him. He later attended the reading with al-Mullawī of several chapters from the Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī and several works of the famous Ṣūfī scholar ash-Sha'rānī.<sup>209</sup>

Among al-Mullawī's writings were Sharḥ as-Samarqandiyyah on al-balāghah (rhetoric), glosses or marginalia (ḥāshiyah) on a well known North African Ṣūfī, Ibn 'Azzām al-Qayrawānī's (d. 972/1563) commentary on as-Sanūsī's (d. 895/1490) Matn Umm al-Barāhīn on tawḥīd, ḥāshiyah on Zakariyyā al-Anṣārī's (d. 926/1520) commentary on the introduction to Aristotle's Logic (ʿIvāghūjī – i.e. Porphyry's Isagoge) by Athīr ad-Dīn al-Abḥārī (d. 663/1265), and an abridgment of ar-Ramlī's (d. 1004/1595) fatwās, a Thabat<sup>210</sup> containing a list of his teachers and the works he read with them, al-La'ālī al-Manthūrah 'alā Naẓm al-Ahwājibūt,<sup>211</sup> a treatise on theology and Ṣūfism.<sup>212</sup>

According to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, al-Mullawī became ill throughout the later years of his life and was confined to his bed. However, he still had complete control over his senses and his students came daily to read with him different traditional Islamic disciplines. He died in Cairo on 15 Rabī' al-Awwal 1181/10 August 1767 and was interred at the Ḥusaynī Shrine (al-Mashhad al-Ḥusaynī).<sup>213</sup>

Among the subjects and books that 'Abd as-Ṣamad read with Aḥmad al-Mullawī were his own writings such as his Ḥāshiyah (marginalia) on al-Makūdī's (d. 807/1404) commentary entitled Sharḥ al-Makūdī on Ibn Mālik's al-Afīyyah on grammar, 'Abd al-Ghani al-Maqdisī's (d. 600/1203) Umdat al-Aḥkām [min Kalām Khayr al-Anām], a collection of legal ḥadīths taken from as-Ṣaḥīḥayn (of al-Bukhārī and Muslim) related to rulings, all the works on Histories of Mecca (Tawārīkh Makkah) compiled by Taqī ad-Dīn al-Fāsī al-Makkī (d. 832/1429), including his Shifā' al-Gharām bi-Akhbār al-Balad al-Ḥarām, with its seven abridgments (muḥtaṣarātuhu as-sab'ah), and al-Iqd ath-Thamīn fī Tārīkh al-Bakd al-Amīn, with its three abridgment (muḥtaṣarātuh ath-thalāthah), and Tāj ad-Dīn Ibn as-Suhkī's (d. 771/1370) extensive biographical compilation of Shāfi'i jurists, Tabaqāt ash-Shāfi'iyyah al-Kubrā.<sup>214</sup>

The next from al-Falimbānī's list of Egyptian teachers is Aḥmad al-Jawharī, a peer of the aforementioned Aḥmad al-Mullawī.<sup>215</sup> He is Shihāb ad-Dīn Aḥmad b. Ḥasan b. 'Abd al-Karīm b. Muḥammad b. Yūsuf b. Karīm ad-Dīn al-Karīmī al-Khālidī ash-Shāfi'ī al-Qūhūrī al-Azhārī (d. 1182/1768), better known as Aḥmad al-Jawharī, since his father was a gemstone merchant (al-jawhar), according to al-Jabartī, he was later distinguished by this nisbah.<sup>216</sup> It is worth noting that during this period, there were three renowned Egyptian scholars by the name of Aḥmad with the same laqab (title) Shihāb ad-Dīn, they were Aḥmad al-Mullawī, Aḥmad al-Jawharī and Aḥmad ad-Damanhūrī; they were in isnād occasionally referred to as the three Shihābs or three stars (ash-Shuhuh ath-thalāthah) and coincidentally, all were al-Falimbānī's teachers.<sup>217</sup>

Aḥmad al-Jawharī was born in Cairo, Egypt in 1096/1684, and from childhood was engaged in learning and studying the Islamic sciences in which he surpassed his contemporaries. He later taught and gave guidance at al-Azhar for almost sixty years. He travelled several times to al-Ḥaramayn, first in 1120/1708 and then 1124/1712, when he met and studied with both 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī and Aḥmad an-Nakhlī, narrating ḥadīth with high isnād from both, and again later in 1130/1717. Among the Islamic literatures which he read with al-Baṣrī and an-Nakhlī were the six canonical ḥadīth books and he received the general ijāzah together with the isnād for the narration of ḥadīth al-awwaliyyah from both scholars.<sup>218</sup>

Aḥmad al-Jawharī was also reported to have travelled to Medina in 1168/1754 where he taught several subjects in ar-Rawḍah of the Prophet's Mosque, close to his tomb. These included at-Tirmidhī's ash-Shamā'ih, on special qualities of the Prophet SAW, Sharḥ al-Jawharah on theology, which he himself had written a gloss (ḥāshiyah), and on Ṣūfism, the exposition of al-Ilkām by Ibn 'Abbād ar-Rundī (d. 792/1390).<sup>219</sup>

Evidently, on Ṣūfī jarīqah Aḥmad al-Jawharī followed the ash-Shādhiliyyah Order, since we know that he was the murshid (spiritual guide) for the Syrian scholar Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Khalīl al-'Ajlūnī ad-Dimashqī (1128-93/1716-79), better known as Abū al-Faṭḥ. The latter received initiation into this order from al-Jawharī during his study in Egypt from 1157/1744 to 1165/1751.<sup>220</sup> Another renowned Egyptian scholar, Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Azhārī (1154-1232/1741-1816), better known as al-Amīr al-Kabīr was also initiated into the ash-Shādhiliyyah Order by al-Jawhārī and later permitted to issue ijāzah for this Order.<sup>221</sup>

Among his writings were Ḥāshiyah on al-Lāqānī's (d. 1041/1631) commentary on his own Jawharat al-Tawḥīd, a work on the verification of saints' miracles in their life and after their death entitled Fayḍ al-Ḥikmah al-Muta'ālī fī ḥikmah Karāmāt al-Awliyā' fī 'l-Jawāb wa-Ba'd al-Ḥuqūq. On scholastic theology (ilm al-kalām) he wrote a work entitled Khālīs an-Naf'ah fī Bayān al-Mafākīh as-Sab'ah, Munqilhat al-'Abd min Ribqat al-Taqlīd, which dealt with deliverance from the noose of imitation, and al-Mabūḥith al-Marḍiyyah as-Saniyyah fī Nazāhat al-Ashiyā' 'an Kullī mā Yunqis Maqāmātihim al-'Ahiyyah az-Zakiyyah, a text discussing the Islamic religious concept of Prophetic transcendence which rebuts anything that decreases their high stations.<sup>222</sup> Among the works that 'Abd as-Samad read with Aḥmad al-Jawhārī were ash-Sha'rānī's (d. 973/1565) Tabaqāt as-Sūfiyyah, a biographical compilation on eminent Sūfis.<sup>223</sup>

According to al-Fādānī, al-Jawhārī compiled a list of his own teachers in his Thabat al-Jawhārī, of which a copy was reportedly owned by al-Kattānī. The latter points out that al-Jawhārī's Thabat included a list of his teachers and copies of ijāzahs written and given to him by the first fifteen teachers listed in that work.<sup>224</sup>

The historian al-Jahūrī reports that al-Jawhārī died in Cairo at sunset, on Wednesday, 8 Jumādī al-Ūlā 1182/20 September 1768. Funeral rites were held at al-Azhar Mosque with an overflow of mourners and he was interred at az-Zāwiyah al-Qādiriyyah.<sup>225</sup>

The next Egyptian teacher of al-Falimbānī was Muḥammad al-Jawhārī.<sup>226</sup> He is Shams ad-Dīn Abū Ḥādī Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Khālidi ash-Shāfi'i, better known as Ibn al-Jawhārī (1151-1215/1738-1800). He was the youngest among the sons of the aforementioned Aḥmad al-Jawhārī, and was thus known as al-Jawhārī as-Ṣaghīr to distinguish him from his father as well as his two brothers, Aḥmad b. Aḥmad b. Ḥasan al-Jawhārī (1132-87/1719-73) and 'Abd al-Fattāḥ b. Aḥmad b. Ḥasan al-Jawhārī (1141-1215/1728-1800), who were also leading scholars of Egypt.<sup>227</sup>

Muhammad al-Jawhari was born in Egypt and grew up under the guidance of his father and, like him, was known as a traditionist. He also studied with his brother Ahmad b. Ahmad al-Jawhari and other leading Egyptian scholars of his father's generation such as Ahmad al-Mullawī, 'Aṣṣayyāh al-Barhānī al-Qāhīrī al-Ajhūrī (d. 1194/1780), Khalīl b. Muhammad al-Tūnī al-Maghribī, and Ḥasan al-Jabartī (d. 1188/1774). His expertise included the field of fiqh and he was such a prominent Shāfi'ī faqīh in Egypt that the Shāfi'ī scholars unanimously nominated him for the Office of Al-Azhar rectorship after the death of Ahmad al-Damanhūrī (d. 1192/1778) but he declined the nomination.<sup>228</sup>

Although he lived mostly in Egypt, Muhammad al-Jawhari travelled frequently to al-Ḥaramayn, where besides performing the ḥajj, he studied and taught students there. In 1168/1754, he accompanied his father to the ḥajj and took the opportunity to study in aṭ-Ṭā'if with 'Abd Allāh al-Mirghānī, the above-mentioned teacher of al-Falimbānī. He later wrote a commentary on al-Mirghānī's al-Mu'jam al-Wāḥiz [fi Aḥādīth an-Nabī al-'Azīz].<sup>229</sup> In 1187/1773 and 1199/1784, he again went for ḥajj with his family where he stayed for a year and conducted lectures at al-Masjid al-Ḥarām.<sup>230</sup> Apart from meeting him in Egypt, it is also likely that al-Falimbānī attended his teaching sessions during these visits to Mecca. We know that, al-Falimbānī was already back in Mecca in 1187/1773 after staying in Medina since he completed his work on jihād entitled Nasīhat al-Muslimīn in Mecca in that year. Another Jāwī scholar, Muḥammad Nafīs al-Banjārī relates that in 1201/1786 he attended Muḥammad al-Jawhari's teaching sessions at al-Masjid al-Ḥarām in Mecca and among the lessons were lectures on taṣawwuf.<sup>231</sup>

Muhammad al-Jawhari was also a prolific author, which added to his fame as one of the leading Egyptian scholars. Al-Baghdādī provides forty titles by him, while al-Bayṭār lists thirty-seven of them; most of his writings deal with jurisprudence, theology, grammar and taṣawwuf. Muḥammad al-Jawhari was also evidently proficient in 'ilm al-falak (astronomy) and he compiled a treatise on the method of astronomical calculations to determine the visibility of the crescent moon for the fasting month (Ramaḍān) entitled Kalākīyat al-Bayān fi Kayfiyyat Thubūt Ramaḍān.<sup>232</sup> The younger al-Jawhari died in Cairo on Sunday, 21 Dhū al-Qa'dah 1215/5 April 1801 and funeral rites were held at al-Azhar with an overflow of mourners and he was interred next to his father and brother at az-Zāwiyah al-Qādiriyyah.<sup>233</sup>

Another Egyptian teacher of al-Falimbānī was Dāwūd b. Sulaymān b. Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. 'Umar b. 'Āmir b. Khidr ash-Sharnūbī al-Burhānī al-Kharibtāwī<sup>234</sup> al-Miṣrī al-Mālikī (1080-1170/1669-1757). He was a scholar of ḥadīth and was given the honorific title al-musnid.<sup>235</sup> According to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, he was born in Kharibtā, in the governorate of al-Buḥayrah, north Egypt, and studied with eminent scholars of his time such as Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Bāqī al-Aẓḥarī az-Zurqānī al-Mālikī (1055-1122/1645-1710), and al-Kharashī, among others.<sup>236</sup> According to al-Fādānī, Dāwūd al-Kharibtāwī's students included 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī, 'Abd ar-Razzāq al-Bakārī from al-Qutay', Yemen, Amr Allāh b. 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Mizjāji, and Abū al-Qāsim b. Sulaymān al-Hajjām. All four studied az-Zurqānī's Sharḥ al-Muwaffiq, a commentary on Imām Mālik's famous work, and the rest of az-Zurqānī's works with him. Al-Kharibtāwī had read the Sharḥ with the expositor, Muḥammad az-Zurqānī, together with the rest of his works, such as Sharḥ al-Mawāḍiḥ al-Ladunniyyah, and Mukhtaṣar al-Maqāsid al-Ḥasaṇah fī Bayān Kathūrin min 'l-Aḥādīth al-Mushtahirah 'akā 'l-Aḥināh.<sup>237</sup> In another isnād, al-Fādānī also points out that al-Falimbānī read Yāsīn al-Ḥimṣī's (d. 1061/1650) Ḥāshiyat at-Tayrīḥ 'akā 'l-Tawḍīḥ, a work on Arabic grammar, with Dāwūd al-Kharibtāwī, who in turn had studied it with Ilyās al-Kūrānī, who had studied it with Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī, who had studied it with Aḥmad al-Bannā ad-Dimyūṣī, who in turn had studied with its author Yāsīn al-Ḥimṣī, originally from Ḥimṣ in Syria.<sup>238</sup>

Dāwūd al-Kharibtāwī lived to a very old age (mu'annar) so that his isnād was regarded as superior and was highly sought after, as he included in his isnād the earlier generations as well as the later ones, or as Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī puts it, "wa- 'āsha ḥatā alḥaq al-aḥfād bi 'l-ajdād," that is, he spanned three generations of active scholars. Az-Zabīdī himself met Dāwūd al-Kharibtāwī and received al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-awḥaliyyah from him together with his ḥizāh.<sup>239</sup> He died in Egypt in Jumādā ath-Thāniyah 1170/February 1757.<sup>240</sup>

According to al-Bayṭār, his son, Muḥammad b. Dāwūd al-Kharibtāwī (d. 1207/1792), like his father, was also a learned scholar, who in turn studied with, among others, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī. He was later requested by az-Zabīdī to write a taqrīz, a brief statement highlighting the value of his multi-volume comprehensive dictionary, Tāj al-ʿArūs min Jawāhir al-Qāmūs. The requested magnificent taqrīz was actually dated 10 Rajab 1184/30 October 1770.<sup>241</sup>

A noted teacher of al-Falimbānī who was associated with Egypt was 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-'Aydārūs (1135-93/1722-79).<sup>242</sup> According to two of his students, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī and 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Jabartī, his full name is Wajīh ad-Dīn Abū al-Marūḥim as-Sayyid 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Muṣṭafā b. Shaykh b. Muṣṭafā al-'Aydārūs al-Ḥusaynī at-Tarīmī al-Miṣrī ash-Shāfi'ī an-Naqshabandī. He originated from Hadramawt in Yemen and was born in Tarīm at sunset on Tuesday, 9 Ṣafar 1135/19 November 1722. He later migrated to at-Ṭā'if, and eventually to Egypt. His genealogy could be traced back to Ḥusayn b. 'Alī عليه السلام, the maternal grandson of the Prophet SAW. He initially studied with his father and grandfather, who both gave him their ijāzah and invested him with the Ṣūfī cloak (albasahu al-khurqah). He mastered fiqh under the guidance of Wajīh ad-Dīn 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. 'Abd Allāh Balfaqīh Bā-'Alawī (d. 1163/1749) who also granted him his ijāzah for all the works he had transmitted (marwiyyatih).<sup>243</sup> 'Abd ar-Raḥmān Balfaqīh had studied with leading scholars of his time such as the renowned Tarīm saint, 'Abd Allāh b. 'Alawī al-Ḥaddād (d. 1132/1719), and al-Ḥaramayn scholars such as 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī, Aḥmad an-Nakhli, and Ibrāhīm al-Kūrīnī. It was from the latter he received his superior ḥunūd.<sup>244</sup>

Accompanying his father, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-'Aydārūs had earlier travelled to India from Tarīm, first reaching Bandar ash-Shihṛ (a port city in South Yemen which functioned as a doorway for the interior of Hadramawt) in 1153/1740, meeting 'Abd Allāh b. 'Umar al-Miḥḍār al-'Aydārūs there, who transmitted to him the dhikr formula (taḳwīn adh-dhikr), investing him with the Ṣūfī cloak and granting both he and his father a general ijāzah. They continued to Bandar Sūrat (City of Surat, India) where he joined his own brother 'Abd Allāh al-Bāhīr and visited his relatives and the local saints. They reached the City of Barūj on 15 Sha'hān 1161/10 August 1748, where he met the Miḥḍār of India, as-Sayyid Aḥmad b. ash-Shaykh al-'Aydārūs, thence went back to Sūrat. His father travelled back to Tarīm, Yemen, while he stayed with his brother 'Abd Allāh al-Bāhir and his uncle, Zayn al-'Ābidīn al-'Aydārūs. During his sojourn in India, he was also reported to have travelled to Jāwah, where several of his miracles (karāmāt) began to appear during his journey, and he then returned to Sūrat and thence back to Yemen.<sup>245</sup>

'Abd ar-Rahmān al-'Aydārūs travelled to Mecca to perform the hajj from Yemen, and later visited the Prophet's SAW tomb in Medina, where he also met and studied with Muḥammad Ḥayāt as-Sindī, Aḥū al-Ḥasan as-Sindī aṣ-Ṣaghīr, Ibrāhīm b. Fayḍ Allāh as-Sindī, Ja'far b. Muḥammad al-Bayṭī and Muḥammad ad-Dāghistānī (originally from Dagestan in the Caucasus). In Mecca, he studied with 'Umar b. Aḥmad as-Saqqāf, Muḥammad b. aṭ-Ṭayyib (d. 1170/1756), 'Abd Allāh b. Sahl, 'Abd Allāh b. Sulaymān Mājramī, Muḥammad Bā-Qushyār, and 'Abd Allāh b. Ja'far b. 'Alawī Mad-hūr (d. 1160/1747), the latter was a student of 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥaddād. 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-'Aydārūs then went to aṭ-Ṭā'if to visit the tomb of Ibn 'Abbās رضي الله عنه, where he also studied with 'Abd Allāh Mīrghānī.<sup>246</sup>

In 1158/1745, 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-'Aydārūs visited Egypt and studied with leading scholars of his time. Among them were: Aḥmad al-Mullawī, Aḥmad al-Jawhārī, Muḥammad b. Sālim al-Ḥifnī, the previously mentioned founder of the al-Khalwatiyyah al-Ḥifnāwiyyah Ṣūfī order in Egypt, and his brother Yūsuf al-Ḥifnī.<sup>247</sup> It is worth noting that according to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, all four scholars also studied with al-'Aydārūs tabarukkan (seeking his blessing), which clearly indicates his esteemed rank in Ṣūfism. A year later, in 1159/1746, he travelled to Mecca with the Egyptian hajj caravan where he married his cousin, ash-Sharīfah 'Alawiyyah al-'Aydārūsiyyah, and resided at as-Salāmah in aṭ-Ṭā'if. He travelled to Egypt for the second time in 1162/1748 with the Egyptian hajj caravan and stayed for a year, then returned to aṭ-Ṭā'if. Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī relates that he himself met al-'Aydārūs in Mecca in 1163/1749. However, this was only for a short period as az-Zabīdī was travelling back to Yemen and al-'Aydārūs to aṭ-Ṭā'if. With the intention of meeting him, az-Zabīdī travelled again from Yemen in 1166/1752, first arriving at Mecca, and after performing the hajj headed to aṭ-Ṭā'if. He stayed in al-'Aydārūs's house in as-Salāmah and learned both the exoteric and esoteric Islamic sciences (al-mantūq wa 'l-maḥmūl min 'l-'uḥm) for more than six months. Later, al-'Aydārūs invested him with the Ṣūfī cloak and granted him ijāzahs for all his transmitted texts (marwīyyāt) and his Ṣūfī farīqah silsilahs. He encouraged az-Zabīdī to travel to Egypt and described his own reception by the Egyptian 'ulamā', rulers (al-umara') and men of letters (al-adabā'), and their hospitality, as well as the presence of prominent saints (al-awliyā' al-a'lām) during his visits. After performing the hajj in the following year, az-Zabīdī travelled to Egypt.<sup>200</sup>

In 1168/1754, al-'Aydārūs arrived again in Egypt where he stayed for a year, and az-Zabīdī took this opportunity to "be as close to him as a patient to a physician," as he puts it, "kāzanatna mukāzamat al-marīḍ at-ṭabīb." In Mecca, al-'Aydārūs married another woman relative ash-Sharīfah Raḡayyah al-'Alawīyyah, the daughter of Sayyid Aḥmad b. Ḥasan Bā-Harūn in 1172/1758 and a year later, in 1173/1759 she gave birth to their son, Muṣṭafā. Eventually, in 1174/1760 he migrated with his family to Egypt, where he continued to reside for seventeen years until his death on Tuesday night, 12 Muḥarram 1192/10 February 1778. His funeral rites were held at al-Azhar and the funeral prayer was led by Ṣūfī Shaykh, Aḥmad ad-Dardīr (d. 1201/1787) with an overflow of mourners, and he was interred at Maqām al-'Aṭīs, near the Zaynab Shrine (Mashhad as-Sayyidah Zaynab).<sup>201</sup>

Al-'Aydārūs also had travelled extensively in Palestine including Gaza, Nāblūs, and Jerusalem. The Damascene mufaddih and renowned Iḥanāfī scholar, Ibn 'Ābidīn (d. 1252/1836) relates that al-'Aydārūs arrived in Damascus in 1183/1769 where he stayed for two months with Ḥusayn al-Murādī (d. 1188/1774), the paternal uncle of the renowned biographer (author of Salf ad-Durar) Muḥammad Khalīl al-Murādī. He also visited Ottoman Anatolia (ad-Diyār ar-Rūmīyyah) in 1191/1777. In short, his extensive travels in India took him ten years, he performed the hajj seventeen times, and he made three journeys from al-Ḥijāz to Cairo, where he settled and undertook six visits to Upper Egypt (aṣ-Ṣa'id) and eight to Dimyāt – in lower Egypt.<sup>202</sup>

Al-'Aydārūs had numerous works attributed to him. Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī provides sixty-two titles, Zabīrah lists forty-three titles, and al-Baḡhlādī lists thirty-five of them.<sup>203</sup> His works dealt with virtually all branches of the Islamic religious disciplines; ḥadīth, fiqh, tawḥīd, and especially tasawwuf, such as Lafā'if al-Jūd fī Mas'alat Waḥdat al-Wujūd

(Necities of Munificence on the Question of 'Oneness of Being'),<sup>252</sup> Fayḍat an-Nafaḥāt fī Mus'alat as-Ṣifāt, on the Question of God's attributes,<sup>253</sup> Sharḥ Ṣalāt Aḥmad al-Badawī, an exposition of the prayers of the most popular Ṣūfī saint in Egypt, Aḥmad al-Badawī (d. 675/1276). He wrote two works on the Naqshabandiyyah Ṣūfī ṭarīqah entitled Ithāf al-Khalīl (Gift to Friends), and an-Naḥḍat al-'Aydūsiyyah fī ṭ-Ṭarīqat an-Naḥshabandiyyah.<sup>254</sup> In addition, Sayyid 'Uthmān al-Batāwī al-Jāwī listed two titles in his isnād work entitled as-Silsilat an-Nabawiyyah, attributed to al-'Aydārūs. They were, Mir 'āt ash-Shumūs [fī Silsilat al-Qutb al-'Aydārūs] and Iqd al-Jawāhir fī Faḍl Ahl Bayt an-Nabī aṭ-Ṭāhir, both works on excellence (faḍl) of the family of the Prophet SAW, which appears to have been once widely read in the Malay Archipelago.<sup>255</sup>

From his extensive travels and his numerous works, it is clear that al-'Aydārūs's studies with many of the major teachers in the revivalist group in Meccan, Medina and Egypt were extensive. Apart from giving instructions in the exoteric (zāhir) sciences, he was also a leading scholar on the esoteric (bāṭin) sciences and was an active Ṣūfī scholar of the Naqshabandiyyah and 'Aydūsiyyah Orders. His students included some of the leading figures in late eighteenth century neo-Ṣūfism, and he appears to have been an important link among those scholars. Through him, for example, one can see a connection between the great Naqshabandiyyah family in Syria, the Murādīs, and the Khalwatiyyah students of Muṣṭafā al-Bakrī in Egypt such as Muḥammad al-Ḥifnī and Muḥammad al-'Amīr al-Kabīr.<sup>256</sup>

One of his most celebrated disciples was Murtadā az-Zabīdī, who relates: "as the number of visitors from distant places requesting his isnāds on the Ṣūfī ṭarīqahs multiplied, while most of the time he was in the state of [spiritual] immersion, he instructed me to collect his isnāds.<sup>257</sup> I compiled a book consisting of ten fascicules in his name, which he called an-Naḥḍat al-Quddūsiyyah bi-Wāṣiḥat al-Biḡ'ah al-'Aydūsiyyah. This was in 1171/1757. Numerous copies were made from this work, and the [spiritual] benefits from this were wide-spread." According to al-Kattānī, an-Naḥḍat is in ten booklets listing one hundred and seventy Ṣūfī ṭarīqahs together with their complete isnāds.<sup>258</sup>

It is important to remember that by the middle of the eighteenth century, some Arab scholars had gained prominent positions in the royal court of Palembang and it was reported that in 1168/1754, a 'certain Sayyid al-'Aydārūs' had married the sister of the Palembang ruler, Sulṭān Maḥmūd. Hence, several Sayyids (whose actual names are unknown to us) began to flock to the Sultanate and gain control of the religious hierarchy. Azra describes them as 'senior priests' and one of the Sayyids was even titled as 'Tuan Besar' (great lord).<sup>259</sup> Perhaps this is rather a simple equivalent of the Old Sayyid (as-Sayyid al-Kabīr).

One might be tempted to identify and link the 'certain Sayyid al-'Aydārūs' to our scholar under discussion. This is because 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-'Aydārūs was known to have been a wandering scholar of Yemen before finally settling in Egypt. We know that he had travelled to Jāwah from India during his extensive travels, which began in the year 1153/1740. Murtadā az-Zabīdī relates clearly that he travelled to the land of Jāwah during his sojourn in India (wa-fi alimā 'dhālik rakiba ilā bilād Jāwah).<sup>260</sup> Since his travels and sojourn in India took him ten years, his travel to Jāwah must have been approximately after 1163/1750. Unfortunately, there are no records of the exact date of his travel to Jāwah. Nevertheless, there is some probability that the 'certain Sayyid al-'Aydārūs' might be our 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-'Aydārūs, especially since he was known to be an eminent scholar in addition to his saintly ability when karāmāt began to appear during his journey to Jāwah.<sup>261</sup>

On the other hand, there is also a probability that this 'certain Sayyid al-'Aydārūs' was another scholar who comes from the same al-'Aydārūs family. According to al-Fādānī, among the scholars of Palembang in the eighteenth century with whom Nawawī al-Bantani read Ibn Abī Jamrah's (d. 695/1295 or 699/1300) Mukhtaṣar Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī was Maḥmūd b. Kinān al-Falimbānī, who in turn learned it from as-Sulṭān as-Sikīḥ Badr ad-Dīn Maḥmūd b. as-Sulṭān Maṣṣūr b. as-Sulṭān 'Abd ar-Raḥmān, who read it with Shaykh al-Islām Qāḍī as-Sulṭanah as-Sayyid 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. al-Ḥusayn b. al-Ḥasan b. 'Alawī b. Aḥmad al-'Aydārūs al-Falimbānī, who in turn learned it in Mecca from 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Jād Allāh al-Bannānī al-Maghribī (d. 1198/1784),<sup>262</sup> who received it from Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ al-Mullawī, who received it from 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣṣī, and so forth to the author, Ibn Abī Jamrah.<sup>263</sup> Since he was appointed as the 'Sultanate Judge' (Qāḍī as-Sulṭanah) in Palembang, it is highly probable that he was the 'certain Sayyid al-'Aydārūs' who married the sister of Sulṭān Maḥmūd, and was appointed to religious office. Thus, the intended al-'Aydārūs must have been Sayyid 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. al-Ḥusayn al-'Aydārūs and not our Sayyid 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Muṣṭafā al-'Aydārūs, unless there is some confusion in the genealogy. Nevertheless, since they come from the same al-'Aydārūs family, they probably met each other during the latter's travel to Jihwāh.

Our contemporary, 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥabshī points out that Muṣṭafā b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-'Aydārūs (1173-99/1759-84) who was born in aṭ-Ṭā'if and died in Egypt, compiled his father's biography in his Faṭḥ al-Muḥaymin al-Qaḍḥī fi Manāqib Sayyidihī 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Muṣṭafā al-'Aydārūs.<sup>264</sup> (Perhaps, this work might provide further accounts on his travel to Jihwāh. But, unfortunately, I have not been able to trace any copy of this work).

Although we do not have sufficient evidence to assess the influence of al-'Aydārūs on 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī, we know that among the works that 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī read with him were al-Fākihī's (d. 972/1564) al-Fawākih al-Jamīyah Sharḥ Mutamimāt al-Īrānīyah and Sharḥ Qaṭr au-Nadī, both works on Arabic grammar, and al-Ghazālī's Iḥyā' 'Ulūm ad-Dīn and Minhāj al-'Āhidīn. With his isnād, al-Falimbānī also relates other works of al-Ghazālī, including Bidāyat al-Hikmah, Kitāb al-Arba'īn fi 'I-Ṣūl, Jawāhir al-Qur'ān, and others.<sup>265</sup> This is significant as al-Falimbānī soon developed an abiding interest in al-Ghazālī's works. Also important to note is that since al-'Aydārūs was one of the leading scholars in esoteric sciences and Ṣūfī tariqahs, al-Falimbānī must have benefited greatly from his instructions and works. This must have included complex Ṣūfī questions such as the Ṣūfī doctrine of waḥdat al-wujūd, particularly we know that al-'Aydārūs wrote his Laṭā'if al-Jūd fi Mas'alat Waḥdat al-Wujūd and Fayḍat an-Nafahāt fi Mas'alat aṣ-Ṣifāt to address such questions. Al-'Aydārūs's journey to Jihwāh is another significant dimension of his place as 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad's learning.

The next scholar in the list of al-Falimbānī's Egyptian teachers was Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī (1145-1205/1732-90).<sup>266</sup> Known variously as Abū al-Fayḍ, Abū al-Jūd, and Abū al-Waqt, as-Sayyid Muḥammad Murtaḍā b. Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd ar-Razzāq al-Ḥusaynī al-'Alawī al-Wāsiṭī al-Biljarrānī al-Ḥindī az-Zabīdī al-Miṣrī al-Qādirī an-Naqshabandī, is more widely known as Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī. He was a leading Ḥanafī scholar, a great lexicographer, linguist, theologian, Sūfī, muhaddith, a grandmaster in genealogy and biographies (ansāb and rijāl).<sup>267</sup> His extensive Dictionary (Tāj al-ʿArīs) may be considered the climax of Arabic classical Lexicography and is strong evidence of his magnificent scholarship.<sup>268</sup>

According to al-Qannūjī, az-Zabīdī's ancestors originally came from Wāsiṭ in Iraq but he was born in Bilgram, a town about forty kilometres from Kannauj (presently in Uttar Pradesh, India) around 10 Muḥarram 1145/3 July 1732. Perhaps, he only stayed in India for a relatively short period, and then migrated to Zabīd, Yemen to study, and apparently, his sojourn in Zabīd was for quite some time from whence is derived his nishab, az-Zabīdī. This, al-Qannūjī added, had somehow overshadowed the public knowledge that his place of birth was in Bilgram, India.<sup>269</sup>

Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī travelled extensively to al-Ḥijāz including Jeddah, Mecca, Medina and at-Tāʾif, and later arrived in Egypt on 9 Ṣafar 1167/5 December 1753, where he settled and became renowned in the Islamic world during his own lifetime. Kings and rulers from Turkey, al-Ḥijāz, India, Yemen, Syria, Iraq, Morocco, Sudan and Algiers corresponded with him, and people sent him presents and gifts from everywhere. He was admired and venerated greatly, to an extent that some people in North Africa (aḥl al-Maghrib) believed that their ḥajj was incomplete if, on their way to Mecca, they did not visit and honour him in Egypt.<sup>270</sup>

As al-Kattānī notes in his Faḥrax, "az-Zabīdī was peerless in his time and age. None after Ibn al-Ḥajar al-ʿAsqalānī and his students can match him in terms of his encyclopaedic knowledge of traditions and associated sciences, nor in fame or number of students."<sup>271</sup>

Not only Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī had many students, but he also had originally studied with numerous teachers. Al-Qannūjī relates that he listed more than three hundred teachers in one of his Barnāmij [ash-Shayakh]. These included Indian scholars such as the muhaddith Muḥammad Fākhīr b. Yaḥyā al-Ilāh-ʿAbādī and unsaid al-waqt (isnād-expert of his time), the famous Shāh Walī Allāh Aḥmad b. ʿAbd ar-Raḥīm ad-Dihlawī (1114-76/1703-62), whose teaching sessions he attended at his house in Delhi.<sup>272</sup> Walī Allāh ad-Dihlawī in turn studied with Muḥlā

Ilyās al-Kūrānī (1047-1138/1637-1726), who was a student of Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī.<sup>273</sup>

According to 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Ahdal, among the scholars with whom Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī studied in Zabīd were Aḥmad b. Muḥammad Maqbūl al-Ahdal and his contemporaries, such as 'Abd al-Khālīq b. Abī Bakr al-Mizjājī, and Muḥammad b. 'Alā' ad-Dīn al-Mizjājī, and those who studied with this generation, such as Sulaymān b. Yahyā al-Ahdal.<sup>274</sup> During his study in Zabīd in 1163/1749, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī relates that he received Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī highly from Muḥammad b. 'Alā' ad-Dīn al-Mizjājī, who in turn received it by way of written ijāzah from Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī in 1100/1688.<sup>275</sup> It should be emphasised that the kinds of ijāzah are particularly significant in the context of contacts among scholars. In this way, for instance, Muḥammad al-Mizjājī (1102-80/1690-1766), who was born a year after al-Kūrānī's death in 1101/1689, received his written ijāzah given to his father 'Alā' ad-Dīn al-Mizjājī and all his children in 1100/1688, and hence was considered a valid transmitter from al-Kūrānī without actually meeting him in person.

Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī himself provides a list of his teachers in some of his works, particularly his al-Mu'jam al-Mukhtaṣṣ (also known as al-Mu'jam al-Kabīr), in his Alfiyyat as-Sanad and in al-Mu'jam as-Saghīr (also known as Barnāmij as-Sulaykh). In this regard, al-Kattānī relates that he found a copy of the al-Mu'jam al-Kabīr in Medina from which he made a copy. He describes it as consisting of more than six hundred biographical notices of his teachers and students.<sup>276</sup> At this point, it is important to remember that nearly all of al-Falimbānī's teachers whom we have examined so far were also connected directly to Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī as either his teachers or his students.

The best known among his disciples were 'Alī b. 'Abd al-Barr al-Wanā'ī, Aḥmad b. 'Ubayd al-'Aḡār, Ṣāliḥ al-Fullānī, Muḥammad ash-Shawāwīnī, 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Karīm b. 'Abd ar-Rasūl al-'Aḡār al-Makkī, 'Abd ar-Rahmān b. Sulaymān al-Ahdal and Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad ar-Ra'īs az-Zamzamī. As for al-Falimbānī, he read with Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī all his works including his celebrated dictionary, Tāj al-'Arūs Sharḥ al-Qāmūs, and his voluminous commentary on al-Ghazālī's Iḥyā' entitled Iḥyā' as-Sādat al-Muttaqīn Sharḥ Iḥyā' 'Ulūm ad-Dīn. In addition, he also learned from him other Islamic scholarly works such as 'Umar as-

Suhrwardī's (d. 632/1234) 'Awārif al-Ma'ārif, a venerable Ṣūfī classic and manual for daily study and practice, and all the works of Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Wahhāb (d. 1206/1792), the founder of the so-called Wahhābī movement, including his Kitāb al-Tawḥīd fī Ḥaq Allāh 'alā 'l-'Abid.<sup>277</sup>

In addition to his numerous teachers and students, and his intellectual distinction and personality, az-Zabīdī also wrote prolifically on fiqh, ḥadīth, tafsīr, Arabic, lexicography, tawḥīd, taṣawwuf, history, ansāb (genealogy), and tarāfīm (biographies) that he compared the number of his writings to a 'lumber of jasmine' as he puts it, "num 'allafāt hiyā min saqaṭ al-matā' mithl al-yāsamin"<sup>278</sup> He is said to have written more than one hundred works, and his biographer even compares him to as-Suyūṭī, calling him the 'Suyūṭī of his time' (Suyūṭī zamānih).<sup>279</sup> In one of his ījāzats to a student, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī provided sixty-three titles, while al-Baghādādī listed forty-nine titles, and al-Jahartī listed forty-five of them.<sup>280</sup> Though he is primarily remembered today for his lexicographical work, Tāj al-'Arūs, his genuine interest in ḥadīth scholarship is beyond doubt. On ḥadīth and isnād alone, al-Kaṭṭānī listed fifty-one titles that az-Zabīdī wrote.<sup>281</sup>

Furthermore, his ḥadīth erudition is reflected not just from these numerous titles, but also from the number of works he devoted to a particular category of ḥadīth. For instance, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī relates that the first rheḍyah of ḥadīth that he received from 'Umar b. Aḥmad al-Makkī as-Suqqīf was al-ḥadīth al-musalsal hi 'l-anwālīyyah when he met him in Medina on 23 Jumādā ath-Thāniyyah 1161/20 June 1748.<sup>282</sup> On this type of ḥadīth alone, az-Zabīdī is reported to have written four works, one of these was written specifically for his student, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Bukhārī al-Aṭharī (d. 1200/1785) and was completed on 10 Rabī' ath-Thānī 1193/26 April 1779.<sup>283</sup>

Perhaps his most acclaimed work is his dictionary entitled Tāj al-'Arūs, which is based on Majd ad-Dīn al-Fayrūzābādī's (d. 818/1415) al-Qāmūs al-Muḥīṭ and a considerable expansion of it. Some have noted that al-Fayrūzābādī's was meant to be a reference for scholars. Az-Zabīdī expanded this into a multi-volume dictionary which is considered his magnum opus. It is worth noting that in his prologue he relates that he benefited greatly in the art of the Arabic discipline from his teacher, Muḥammad h. at-Ṭayyib al-Fāsī al-Madanī (1110-70/1698-1756) whom he regarded as his main authority ('umda) in this field. He tells us that it took him fourteen years and two months to complete the Tāj al-'Arūs in 1181/1767 and upon its completion, threw a large banquet and invited many students and scholars of the time who wrote their praise of this work.<sup>254</sup> Thus, by calculating backwards, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī probably started this work in 1167/1753 at the age of twenty-two. This coincides with the date of his first arrival in Egypt, already mentioned earlier, on 9 Šafar 1167/5 December 1753. It is worth noting that apart from Arabic, he was proficient in Turkish, Persian and the language of al-Karj or al-Kurj (perhaps the language of the Georgian people). He passed away in Egypt during a plague epidemic on Sunday, Šahbān 1205/April 1790 and was buried at the Ruqayyah Shrine (Mashhad as-Sayyidah Ruqayyah) next to his first wife who had died in 1196/1781.

In addition to his ḥadīth expertise, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī without doubt was also a Šūfī master. Apparently, in terms of his ṭarīqah affiliation, he followed the an-Naqshabandiyyah Šūfī Order that he probably had received from his aforementioned teacher, 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-'Aydārūs. He authored at least four works pertaining to this Order. Other works on Sūfism that he wrote include Tanzīl Saḥā'ih ad-Durr li-Qurrā' Ḥizb al-Bahr, a commentary on ash-Shūdhilī's (d. 656/1258) famous Litany of the Sea, a unique litany made of Qur'ānic verses and supplications, Jadhwat al-Qabas fī Ḥusūl Natījat adh-Dhikr Ba'd Ḥifz an-Nafas, perhaps on Šūfī breathing techniques while performing remembrance (dhikr), and Sharḥ Ṣalawāt al-Qutb 'Abd as-Sakīm b. Mashīsh, a commentary on the prayers and litanies by Ibn Mashīsh (d. 625/1228) of Fez.

The last scholar in the list of al-Falimbānī's Egyptian teachers<sup>255</sup> was Abū al-Ḥasan, also nicknamed Abū an-Nūr, 'Alī b. 'Abd al-Barr b. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ b. Muḥammad b. Abī al-Karshī b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥalīlāwī al-Ḥasanī al-Wanā'ī (or al-Wafā'ī) ash-Shāfi'ī al-Ash'arī al-Khalwatī al-Azharī al-Miṣrī al-Makkī (d. 1211/1796), mentioned earlier as a student of Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī. His genealogy is traced back to Ḥasan b. 'Alī <sup>رضي الله عنه</sup>, maternal grandson of the Prophet SAW. 'Alī al-Wanā'ī was born in Cairo in 1170/1756 and towards the end of his life migrated to al-Ḥijāz where he later died in Medina.<sup>256</sup> Unfortunately, al-Falimbānī himself and al-Fādānī do not tell us where the former met and studied with al-Wanā'ī. However, looking at the date of al-Wanā'ī's move to Medina around 1210/1795, it is unlikely that al-Falimbānī studied with him at that time as he himself was already at his apex of writing and teaching. Furthermore, al-Wanā'ī was one of Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī's close students, which makes it highly plausible that al-Falimbānī met him previously during his own study with az-Zabīdī in Egypt.

Obviously, from his full chain of names and nishab, al-Wanā'ī followed the Shālī'ī School of Islamic jurisprudence, the Ash'arite School of Islamic theology, and in Sūfism he followed the path of the Khalwatiyyah Sūfī Order. He was initiated into this Order by Aḥmad ad-Dardīr al-'Adawī (1127-1201/1715-86) in 1197/1783 who also granted him authorisation (adhina lahu bi 'l-talqīn) to transmit the dhikr formula to novices. Ad-Dardīr was the disciple of al-Ḥifnī, who was a khalīfah of Muṣṭafā al-Hakrī in Egypt, Muḥammad b. Sālim in 1172/1758.<sup>287</sup>

Al-Wanā'ī was described as one of the Egyptian geniuses who unfortunately, only lived for about forty years. Al-Kattānī remarks: "had he lived longer, he would have surpassed and overshadowed many of his own teachers." Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī praised him as an exceptional student and handed him his commentary on al-Ghazālī's al-Iḥyā', requesting him to examine it. He examined it closely and pointed out several mistakes that were then rectified by his teacher. He glittered with light and his knowledge dealing with the heart was well established.<sup>288</sup> Evidently, his talent was obvious even at an early age as he was reported to have authored books on nqā'id (creed), ḥadīth, fiqh, taṣawwuf, farā'id (rules of inheritance), grammar, rhetoric and logic which he began at the age of eighteen.<sup>289</sup>

In an ijāzah granted by Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī on 24 Shawwāl 1196/2 October 1782, 'Alī al-Wanā'ī relates that he attended one of his teaching sessions at his house in Suwayqat al-Lālā, Egypt, when he received the ḥadīth al-awwalīyyah all over again ('awḍan 'akī had'). In another ijāzah, he relates that he attended the teaching session of Aḥmad b. Aḥmad Jum'ah al-Bujayramī ash-Shālī'ī (d. 1197/1782) in Dhū al-Ḥijjah 1196/ November 1782.<sup>290</sup> Thus, we know he was still studying in Egypt until the late twelfth century A.H.

In addition to studying with Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī, 'Alī al-Wanā'ī learned from such scholars as Muḥammad al-Ḥifnī, 'Isā b. Aḥmad al-Barāwī (d. 1182/1768), 'Aṭīyyah al-Ajhūrī (d. 1194/1780), Aḥmad

b. Jum'ah al-Bujayramī, Muṣṭafā b. Raḥmat Allāh al-Ayyūbī (1135-1205/1722-90) better known as ar-Raḥmatī ad-Dīnashqī, who attended as a child of eight 'Abd al-Ghanī an-Nābulusī's teaching sessions in the last years of his life, Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad an-Numrusī, and Aḥmad b. Muḥammad ad-Dardīr al-'Adawī. The oldest of his teachers from whom he inherited 'superior isnāds' (al-isnād al-'ālī) was al-Mu'ammār 'Abd al-Qādir b. Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. al-Qāsim al-Andalusī and later al-Miṣrī who had lived for one hundred and twenty eight years.<sup>291</sup>

Al-Wanā'ī had numerous students including his own peers such as the Medinese muḥaddith Ṣāliḥ al-Fullānī (d. 1218/1803) with whom he exchanged isnāds, and scholars of the younger generation such as 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Karīm b. 'Abd ar-Rasūl al-'Aḥḍār, Muḥammad Ṣāliḥ b. Ibrāhīm ar-Ra'īs az-Zamzamī, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Sulaymān al-Aḥdal, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad al-Kuzbarī and Muḥammad b. 'Aydārūs al-Ḥabshī. All received the ḥadīth al-awwalīyyah from him and were granted his general ijāzah.<sup>292</sup> In fact, he granted the scholars resident of Mecca his general ijāzah dated Thursday, 22 Dhū al-Ḥijjah 1207/31 July 1793 and permitted those who were present on that day to narrate from him by way of this ijāzah.<sup>293</sup>

His Meccan student 'Umar al-'Aḥḍār, who regarded him as his authority ('imlāk) relates that he arrived in Mecca in 1203/1788 and stayed there for three years. After his visit to the Prophet's SAW tomb in Medina, he went back to Egypt and stayed for sometime when he finally received the prophetic instruction to return to Medina and was foretold of the glad tidings that he will die there. He immediately travelled to Mecca where he stayed and performed the pilgrimage, thence to Medina where he died on 21 Muḥarram 1211/27 July 1796 and was interred at al-Baqī' cemetery.<sup>294</sup>

According to al-Kattānī, al-Wanā'ī compiled the list of his teachers in two ṭabaṭs, one large and one small, the latter, on narrations that he received specifically from his teacher Aḥmad b. Jum'ah al-Bujayramī. The small ṭabaṭ, he added, was discovered by Aḥmad Abū al-Khayr in India in 1325/1907 who pointed out that it contained al-Wanā'ī's ijāzah written in his own handwriting granted to Muḥammad Ṣāliḥ ar-Ra'īs az-Zamzamī al-Makkī.<sup>295</sup>

Among al-Wanā'ī's works were his thabat entitled al-Mawāhib as-Saniyyah fī 'l-Asnād al-Wanā'īyah, probably the above mentioned large thabat, Mansik al-Wanā'ī, apparently a work on the rules and rites of pilgrimage, Kashf Niqāb Manhaj al-Tulūb, a work on fiqh, ad-Dalā'il al-Mu'tabarah bi-Sharh al-'Aqā'id al-Musammāt bi-'l-Jawharah, and Imdād Jāmi' al-Ḥaqā'iq bi-Sharh al-Mawrid ar-Rā'iq, both on tawhīd, Durrat as-Sālikīn fī Ridā' Rahh al-'Alawīn, and Najāt ar-Rāh wa-Kaaz al-Futūḥ, both works, as noted by 'Aydārūs al-Jabshī, were significant works on Sūfism, and a work on asceticism entitled az-Zahrat al-'Uyūf fī 'l-Taḥdhīr min Maṭī' al-Ḥayāt ad-Dunyā, completed in 1201/1786.<sup>296</sup>

Al-Falimbānī possibly had met and studied with 'Alī al-Wanā'ī during his travel to Egypt. However, he also indicated that he studied with him in Mecca probably during his three year stay in Mecca from 1203/1788 and just before al-Falimbānī left for Zabīd in 1206/1791.<sup>297</sup> Among the religious works that al-Falimbānī learned from him were Abū al-Qāsim al-Qushayrī's (d. 465/1072) ar-Risālah al-Qushayriyyah, the celebrated Sūfī manual, Zakariyyā al-Anṣārī's (d. 926/1520) Lubb al-'Uṣūl, and its commentary, Ghāyat al-Wisāl, both works on principles of jurisprudence (uṣūl al-fiqh), all the works of Ibn 'Abd as-Salām (d. 660/1261) including his al-Qurwā'id al-Kubrā on fiqh, and Ibn Abī ad-Dunyā's (d. 281/894) Kitāb ash-Shukr on ḥadīth.<sup>298</sup>

Damascus

Based on the list of the Damascene scholars with whom al-Falimbānī came into contact, and al-Fādānī's report that he studied with them in Damascus, it is plausible that he must have taken the opportunity to travel northward to Syria through Palestine during his period of sojourn in Egypt. The strongest evidence that shows al-Falimbānī travelled to Damascus was related by al-Fādānī when he says, "wa-rawū 'Aḥd as-Samad aydan ... bi-Digardig 'an Muḥammad b. Sāliḥ as-Saffārīnī, wa-Aḥmad b. 'l-'Bayd al-'Aṭṭār," thus pointing out he studied with them in Damascus.<sup>299</sup> From various sources, I was able to trace another two Syrian teachers of al-Falimbānī in addition to Aḥmad al-'Aṭṭār and Muḥammad as-Saffārīnī. They are Muḥammad al-'Aqīlī and 'Umar al-Armanāzī. Thus, it is important to examine the biographies of these four teachers, as they further show us the connections 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī had with Syrian scholars.

Shihāb ad-Dīn Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad b. 'Ubayd b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Askar b. Aḥmad al-Ḥimṣī al-'Aṭṭār ad-Dumashqī (1138-1218/1725-1803) was an important scholar from the al-'Aṭṭār family whose primary renown was as the muftadilīth of Syria during his time.<sup>300</sup> His ancestors originated from Ḥims (Homs), between Damascus and Ḥamāh. His genealogy is traced back to the Prophet SAW. He was born in Damascus and he died in that city.<sup>301</sup> Al-Bayṭār referred to him as Aḥmad b. 'Ubayd Allāh b. 'Askar al-'Aṭṭār, omitting his grandfather 'Abd Allāh and giving his father's name as 'Ubayd Allāh. However, a copy of Aḥmad al-'Aṭṭār's own ijāzah endorsed in his own handwriting and another ijāzah given to him by Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī clearly indicate that his father and grandfather were 'Ubayd and 'Abd Allāh respectively.<sup>302</sup>

In an unpublished manuscript copy of his Thabat al-'Aṭṭār, perhaps inscribed by one of his students, Muḥammad Anīs in 1265/1848, Aḥmad al-'Aṭṭār listed sixteen of his Damascene teachers, a further three teachers who were visiting scholars in Damascus, and eight scholars whom he corresponded with and obtained their general ijāzah. He also provides titles of various books of Islamic disciplines which he has studied along with the ṭawāḍi to each of them.<sup>303</sup>

Among al-'Aṭṭār's Damascene teachers listed in the Thabat are 'Alī b. Aḥmad al-Kuzbarī (d. 1165/1752), Abū al-Ma'ālī Muḥammad b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Ghazzī (1096-1167/1685-1753), Ismā'īl b. Muḥammad al-'Ajlūnī (d. 1162/1748), Aḥmad b. 'Alī al-Manīnī (1089-1172/1678-1759), Ilyās b. Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī (d. 1138/1726), Aḥmad al-Ba'ālī and others. All of them were students of the renowned Ḥanafī Ṣūfī shaykh, 'Abd al-Ghanī b. Ismā'īl an-Nābulusī (d. 1143/1731).<sup>304</sup>

In addition to studying with Syrian scholars, Aḥmad al-'Aṭṭār studied with visiting scholars to Damascus such as the above-mentioned Ṣūfī and muftī of Medina, Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Kurdī, and two Palestinians, the muftī of al-Quds (Jerusalem), Muḥammad b. Muḥammad at-Tāḥillāṣī (d. 1191/1777), and Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Bukhārī al-Khalīlī (d. 1200/1785) from Hebron. All three also granted him ijāzahs.

Furthermore, al-'Aṭṭār corresponded with a number of scholars of al-Ḥijāz and Egypt requesting their general ijāzahs to transmit their works.

They include, from al-Ḥijāz, Ja'far b. Ḥasan al-Barzanjī (d. 1177/1763), the famous author of al-Mawā'id, and 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Fattānī aṭ-Ṭā'ifī; and Egyptian scholars such as Aḥmad al-Mullawī, Aḥmad al-Jawharī, the two brothers, Yūsuf (d. 1176/1763) and Muḥammad (d. 1181/1767) sons of Sālim al-Ḥifnī, 'Aṭīyyat Allāh al-Ajhūrī (d. 1194/1780) and Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī.<sup>305</sup>

His list of teachers was later compiled by one of his closest students 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Kuzbarī (d. 1262/1846) in his work entitled Intikḥāb al-'Awālī wa 'sh-Shuyūkh al-Akhyār min Fahāris Shaykhinā al-Imām al-Musnid al-'Aṭār, which was completed in Sha'bān 1207/March 1793 and later endorsed by al-'Aṭār himself.<sup>306</sup> Another student, Ibn 'Ābidīn relates that al-'Aṭār performed the ḥajj four times, in 1176/1762, 1196/1781, 1203/1789 and 1207/1792, and travelled to Egypt and Turkish Anatolia (Bilād ar-Rūm).<sup>307</sup>

It is clear that apart from his visits to al-Ḥaramayn for the ḥajj, Aḥmad al-'Aṭār stayed for a while to establish contact with prominent scholars there as well as to teach. During his third visit to Mecca in Ramaḍān 1203/May 1789, he was requested by the Meccan muhaddith 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Karīm al-'Aṭār<sup>308</sup> al-Makkī to give lectures on Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī in al-Masjid al-Ḥarām. Aḥmad al-'Aṭār then granted 'Umar his ijāzah for the Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī and all his narrations (marwīyyātih) and transmitted to him al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-awwalīyyah.<sup>309</sup> It is important to point out that 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī is unlikely to have met Aḥmad al-'Aṭār in Mecca during this particular visit as he was busied with completing the final volume of his Sayr as-Sālikīn in aṭ-Ṭā'if during Ramaḍān 1203/May 1789.<sup>310</sup> As for al-'Aṭār's fourth visit in 1207/1792, by that time al-Falimbānī had already left for Zabīd in 1206/1791. Therefore, al-Falimbānī must have met al-'Aṭār in Damascus earlier, perhaps in the early 1170's/1750's. As we will see shortly, his second Damascene teacher, as-Salārīnī died in 1188/1774, and we know that from the dates of his works, al-Falimbānī was already in al-Ḥaramayn from 1178/1765 onwards, actively writing and teaching in Mecca.

Upon Aḥmad al-'Aṭār's request, his contemporary Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī sent him an ijāzah from Egypt, dated Saturday, 28 Rajah 1203/24 May 1789. Later during his visit to Egypt, al-'Aṭār received the general

ijāzah directly from Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī who also instructed him in 'the mystical formula' and invested him with his Ṣūfī cloak, as al-'Aṭṭār himself explains, "faqad ajāzau al-ijāzat al-'āmmah wa-laqqanau ath-dhikr al-khafī wa-albasanī khirqatahu."<sup>31</sup>

Regarding al-'Aṭṭār's position in Damascus, ash-Shaṭṭī relates that the scholarly and Ṣūfī leadership (maṣkyakhah) of Damascus at the turn of the thirteenth century A.H. was exemplified by Ahmad al-'Aṭṭār who was its shining star (shihābuhā) and Muḥammad al-Kuzbarī who was its sun (shamsuhā); they were twins in 'ilm and foster-brothers in piety. Al-'Aṭṭār was born in 1138/1725 and died in 1218/1803 at the age of eighty, while al-Kuzbarī was born in 1140/1727 and died in 1221/1806 at the age of eighty-one, and both shared the same teachers. It also happened that their sons 'Uṣmīd al-'Aṭṭār and 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Kuzbarī were almost exact contemporaries and close colleagues. The former was born in 1186/1772 and the latter in 1184/1770, and both were leading scholars of Syria like their respective fathers. They went on hajj together in 1263/1846, the latter died on his outward journey in Mecca, while the former died in al-Qaṣrīnah (in modern south Jordan) during his return journey.<sup>32</sup>

Ahmad al-'Aṭṭār was also reported to have played an important role against the French occupation in Egypt. When the French occupied Egypt and marched on the coastal area of Palestine and reached Ṣafad (modern Safed) and Nablus in 1214/1799, he set out to gather the people of Damascus for resistance and called for jihād. He incited them to go to jihād and explained to them the merit and reward of such action. He joined the army front line and marched towards the enemy willing to sacrifice his possessions, children and himself. He later died in Damascus on 9 Rabī' al-Ākhir 1218/28 July 1803.<sup>33</sup> It is important to note that al-Falimbānī who himself was al-'Aṭṭār's student, at the end of his life, was reported to have been involved in the jihād against the Thai occupation of Kedah. Perhaps, this involvement was partly influenced by the example of his teacher Ahmad al-'Aṭṭār.

Among the Islamic religious works that al-Falimbānī read with and learned from Ahmad al-'Aṭṭār was his teacher Ismā'īl al-'Ajlūnī's (d. 1162/1748) Iqd al-Jawhar ath-Thamīn [fi Arba' in Hadithan min Ahādith Sayyid al-Mursalīn]. With this isnād from al-'Aṭṭār, al-Falimbānī relates the rest of al-'Ajlūnī's works.<sup>104</sup> However, al-'Aṭṭār himself was not a prolific author as all his biographers including al-Kattānī, al-Bayṭār, az-Ziriklī and Kaḥḥālāh only credit him with one work, namely his Thabat. This is perhaps why al-Fūdīnī only listed one isnād linking al-'Ajlūnī's works to al-Falimbānī through al-'Aṭṭār.

The second Damascene teacher of al-Falimbānī, Shams ad-Dīn Abū 'Abd Allāh (also Abū al-'Awn) Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. Sālim b. Sulaymān as-Saffārīnī an-Nābulusī al-Ḥanbalī al-Atharī al-Qādirī (d. 1188/1774), was a leading traditionist and a Ḥanbalī faqīh and a profound writer on various issues.<sup>105</sup> He was born and raised in Saffārīn, a village near Nablus, Palestine in 1114/1702, where he learned the Qur'ān and studied other Islamic sciences in Nablus in 1131/1718.<sup>106</sup>

Muḥammad as-Saffārīnī then travelled to Damascus in 1133/1720 where he sojourned for five years and studied under such scholars as 'Abd al-Qādir b. 'Umar al-Qādirī at-Taghlibī al-Ḥanbalī (d. 1135/1722) who granted him ijāzah dated 1135/1722 just before the latter died, 'Abd al-Ghanī an-Nābulusī aṣ-Ṣūfī al-Ḥanafī (d. 1143/1731) with whom he studied among others, his Qur'ānic exegesis according to Sūfism, and who later granted him his ijāzah dated 1138/1725, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Mujallid al-Ḥanafī (d. 1140/1727) who also granted him ijāzah, Ilyās al-Kurdī al-Kūrānī (d. 1138/1725) with whom he studied the rational sciences (kurah al-na'qūf), Ismā'īl al-'Ajlūnī (d. 1162/1748), Muṣṭafā b. Kamāl ad-Dīn al-Bakrī (d. 1162/1748), and others.<sup>107</sup>

As one can see in as-Saffārīnī's own work, Thabat al-Imām as-Saffārīnī, his education was thorough. He studied many sciences, including ḥadīth, fiqh, tafsīr, sciences of the Arabic language, sīrah and taṣawwuf. In the Thabat, he devotes long pages to providing a list of his teachers and the titles of ḥadīth books he has studied, along with the isnāds to each of them. He goes on to mention books in other fields. As for taṣawwuf, he studied books written by such famous Sūfīs as al-Qushayrī, al-Ghazālī, al-Jīlānī, ash-Sha'rānī and the poet, al-Būṣīrī.

It is of particular importance that, in the Thabat, as-Saffārīnī also gives an account of several examples of al-ḥadīth al-musalsal, each with its own peculiarity. For instance, he tells us that he transmitted a ḥadīth narrated by Imām Muslim in his aṣ-Ṣaḥīḥ with continuous chains of Damascene scholars (al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'd-Dimashqiyyūn). He received it from his Damascene teachers, 'Abd al-Qādir at-Taghlībī in 1135/1722, 'Abd al-Ghanī an-Nābulūsī, and 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Mujallid, all three received it from their teacher, 'Abd al-Baqī ad-Dimashqī, and so forth to the companion Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī <sup>may Allah be pleased with him</sup> who himself had entered Damascus. Other musalsals also included al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-Ḥanbalīyyah (continuous chains with Ḥanbalī scholars), al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-Muḥammadiyyah (continuous chains with scholars named Muḥammad), and al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-Ḥanafīyyah (continuous chains with Ḥanafī scholars).<sup>318</sup> Muḥammad as-Saffārīnī also points out that 'Abd al-Ghanī an-Nābulūsī granted him ijāzah for all his works, which come up to more than three hundred works on virtually every aspect of the Islamic disciplines.<sup>319</sup>

During his ḥajj in 1148/1735, as-Saffārīnī took the opportunity to study with Muḥammad Ḥayāt as-Sindī in Medina where he received ḥadīth instruction through samā' by attending his teaching sessions, in particular al-ḥadīth al-musalsal bi 'l-awwalīyyah and the opening chapters of the six canonical ḥadīth books (awā'il al-kutub as-sittah). At the same time, he also studied with Muḥammad ad-Daqqāq al-Maghribī (d. 1158/1745 in Medina).<sup>320</sup> Presumably, he had also travelled to al-Ḥijāz earlier, prior to the death of Aḥmad an-Nakhli (d. 1130/1717) and 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī (d. 1134/1722) as he included both as his teachers.<sup>321</sup>

After having acquired a strong grounding in various sciences, as-Saffārīnī returned to his village, Saffārīn, and after a short stay, left for Nablus to reside therein. He is described by his students as having a dignified character with an awe-inspiring personality who would frequently busy himself with providing guidance and instruction to his students especially in the science of ḥadīth, and who regularly prayed the supererogatory night prayers (qiyām al-layl) in the mosque, encouraging others to do the same. Beginning from 1148/1735, he devoted his life to benefit others with his knowledge and courage, commanding the good and forbidding the evil until the end of his life. He died in Nablus on Monday, 8 Shawwāl 1188/12 December 1774 and was buried at az-Zārikiyyah cemetery.<sup>322</sup>

As-Saffārīnī had numerous students in Damascus who included among others, Muḥammad Shākir al-'Aqqād, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Bukhārī al-Khalīlī and Muṣṭafā b. Sa'd ar-Ruḥaybānī as-Suyūfī ad-

Dimashqī (1164-1243/1750-1827). Not only was he famous in Syria (ash-Shām) but several distant scholars corresponded with him requesting his ijāzah. They include, from Egypt, Murtaḍā az-Zabīdī who received his ijāzah written and sent from Nablus in 1179/1765, from Medina, 'Abd al-Qādir b. Khalīl al-Madanī better known as Kadak Zādah, and from Yemen, Sulaymān b. Yahyā al-Ahdal and 'Abd al-Khāliq b. 'Alī al-Mizjājī.<sup>123</sup>

As-Saffārīnī was known for his ascetic (zuhd) qualities, such that he would hardly heard anything of the world except books, for he was an enthusiastic book collector. That is reflected in his writings that are usually crammed full of quotes from various works. He authored many books, and wrote poems on various issues. His works include ad-Durrat al-Muḥḥiyah fī 'Iqd al-Firqat al-Marḍiyyah, his commentary on this entitled Lawāmi' al-Anwār al-Bahīyyah wa-Sawāji' al-Āthār al-Athariyyah, Kashf al-Lithām a commentary on 'Abd al-Ghanī al-Maqdisī's 'Umdat al-Aḥkām, and Sharḥ Thulūthiyyāt Musnad al-Imām Aḥmad, a commentary on Imām Aḥmad's 'thulūthiyyāt which refers to those narrations of Imām Aḥmad that only have three narrators between himself and the Prophet SAW. Such chains are the shortest chains of Imām Aḥmad, and of course, as we have already learned, the shorter the chain, the stronger the ḥadīth.<sup>124</sup>

'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī studied all as-Saffārīnī's works, in particular his ad-Durrat al-Muḥḥiyah, its commentary, Lawāmi' al-Anwār al-Bahīyyah, and also studied with him at-Taḥāzānī's (d. 791/1389) exposition of az-Zanjānī's (d. 655/1257) Taṣrīf on Arabic grammar and syntax.<sup>125</sup>

The third Damascene teacher of al-Falimbānī was Sirāj ad-Dīn Abū Ḥafṣ 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Qādir al-Armanāzī al-Ḥalabī ash-Shāfi'ī (1105-48/1693-1735).<sup>126</sup> His ancestors originated from Armanāz, a small town located in the district of Idlib, northwest Syria, near the modern Syrian-Turkish border, while he himself was born and died in Ḥalab (Aleppo).<sup>127</sup>

According to al-Murāḍī, 'Umar al-Armanāzī was a distinguished muqri' (reciter of the Qur'ān), faraḍī (an expert on the Islamic laws of inheritance), 'ālim (savant), 'āmil (practicing scholar), fāḍil (noble), kāmil (perfect) and a leading expert in writing legal documents (ra'īn fi kitābat al-wathā'iq ash-shar'iyyah). He was raised by his father who was a pious, righteous man and the imām and khatīb of al-Qaṣṭal al-Ḥarāmī Mosque in Ḥalab, from whom he learned the Qur'ān. He then studied grammar, jurisprudence and Islamic rules of inheritance under Jābir b. Aḥmad al-Ḥawrānī and 'Abd al-Laṭīf b. 'Abd al-Qādir az-Zawā'idī and became proficient in these subjects. With Muṣṭafā b. Maṣṣūr at-Tayyib he advanced in 'ilm al-miqāt (science of timekeeping through astrology) and studied ḥadīth with the visiting Meccan nūḥaddīth, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad Ibn 'Aqilah (d. 1150/1737) upon the latter's arrival in Ḥalab. He also studied Arabic linguistic sciences including syntax, al-ma'ānī (the science of meanings), al-bayān (rhetoric) and the principles of grammar with several other scholars.<sup>108</sup>

Towards the end of his life, al-Armanāzī memorised the whole Qur'ān and the text of ash-Shāṭibiyyah, the metrical treatise on the various readings and orthography of the Qur'ān under the guidance of Muḥammad b. Muṣṭafā al-Basrī. He would frequently busy himself with teaching the science of Qur'anic recitation (Qirā'at), one of the many subjects he had mastered. Later, al-Armanāzī wrote a compendious commentary on ash-Shāṭibi's (d. 590/1194) Qirā'at Sab'ah wa-Asharah (seven and ten recital traditions) entitled al-Ishārāt al-'Umaniyyah fi Ḥallī Rumūz ash-Shāṭibiyyah. However, he died before completing it, and it was later completed by 'Umar b. Shāhīn.<sup>109</sup>

From al-Falimbānī's ismāds, it appears that the only text that he received from al-Armanāzī was Yāsīn al-Ḥimsī's (d. 1061/1650) Ḥāshiyah on al-Fākihī's (d. 972/1564) Sharḥ Qaṭr an-Nadā, a work on Arabic grammar.<sup>110</sup> However, taking into account the year of death of al-Armanāzī (Sha'bān 1148/December 1735), it is very unlikely that al-Falimbānī had travelled to Syria at such early period, otherwise he would have met with its earlier generations of scholars. In addition, I have pointed out earlier that he was studying in Zabīd from 1147/1734 onwards. Perhaps, he might have met him in Yemen; however, unfortunately his biographer does not provide us with any account of his travels outside Ḥalab. Presumably, al-Falimbānī had included him among his Syrian teachers by way of marāsalaḥ (correspondence) or ijāzah. The latter seems to be more plausible, as al-Fādhānī points out that one Yemeni scholar had transmitted the works of ash-Shāṭibī from 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Ahdal, who in turn received it from 'Umar al-Armanāzī.<sup>331</sup> However, again, on examining the year of birth of al-Ahdal (1179/1765) it is impossible that these two scholars had met and apparently al-Fādānī must have forgotten to include the intermediaries between them. Nevertheless, at this point, it suffices to say that either by direct attendance or more likely by way of ijāzah, 'Umar al-Armanāzī was one of al-Falimbānī's Syrian teachers.

The last scholar in the list of al-Falimbānī's Syrian teachers was Shams ad-Dīn Muḥammad b. Abū al-Faḍl 'Uthmān b. 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. 'Uthmān b. 'Abd ar-Razzāq al-'Aqlī<sup>332</sup> al-Ḥaṭā'ihī al-Ḥalabī al-'Umarī ash-Shāfi'ī (1163-1245/1749-1829).

Al-Bayṭār describes Muḥammad al-'Aqlī as al-'ālim, al-faqīh, al-faḍīl, ad-dayyīn (religionist), aṣ-ṣāliḥ (righteous), al-warī' (pious), az-zāhid (ascetic), al-'ābid (worshipper). He was born and raised in Ḥalab. He memorised the Qur'ān and the text of ash-Shūṭibīyyah under the guidance of his father and mentor, who himself had memorised them at the age of twelve.<sup>333</sup> He received ijāzah from a group of muhaddiths. They include scholars such as 'Aṭā' Allāh b. Aḥmad al-Makkī, Aḥmad b. 'Ubayd al-'Aṭār, Maṣṣūr b. Muṣṭafā as-Sammānī al-Ḥalabī, 'Abd al-Karīm b. Aḥmad ash-Sharābūtī al-Ḥalabī (1106-78/1694-1764), and others.<sup>334</sup> Ash-Sharābūtī himself in turn learned from scholars such as 'Abd al-Ghanī an-Nābulusī, 'Abd al-Qādir al-Taḡhlībī, Ilyās al-Kurdī, and 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-Mujallid, and during ḥajj in 1123/1711, ash-Sharābūtī studied with al-Baṣrī, an-Nakhḥī and Abū Ṭahīr al-Kūrānī, and in 1143/1730 studied with Muḥammad Ḥayāt as-Sindī and Muḥammad ad-Daqqāq.<sup>335</sup>

It is worth noting that Muḥammad al-'Aqlī's father, 'Uthmān (1135-93/1722-79), during his ḥajj in 1176/1762 took the opportunity to study with al-Ḥaramayn scholars. They include Muḥammad as-Sammān from whom he learned ḥadīth and received the initiation into the Qādiriyyah ṣūfī order, Muḥammad b. Sulaymān al-Madānī, Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh al-Maghribī, Abū al-Ḥasan as-Sindī aṣ-Ṣaghīr and 'Aṭā' Allāh al-Makkī.<sup>336</sup> According to al-Kattānī, his brother, 'Abd ar-Raḥmān al-'Aqlī was also a renowned Syrian scholar. Both Muḥammad and 'Abd ar-Raḥmān studied with their father 'Uthmān al-'Aqlī, who in turn studied with Ṭaha al-Jibrīnī al-Ḥalabī, who was a student of 'Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī.<sup>337</sup>

Apart from his father and the group of muḥaddiths, in 1205/1790 Muḥammad al-'Aqīlī met and studied with his contemporary, the historian and the muftī of Damascus, Khalīl al-Murādī. The latter is chiefly known for his Saḥḥ ad-Durar, a biographical dictionary on the twelfth/eighteenth century notables, and with whom he exchanged isnāds.<sup>338</sup>

According to al-Fādānī, 'Abd as-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī learned Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim from Muḥammad b. 'Uthmān al-'Aqīlī al-Ḥalabī, who in turn had learned it from Muḥammad Khalīl b. 'Alī al-Murādī, who in turn received it from Muḥammad b. Faḍl Allāh al-Muḥibbī ad-Dimashqī, and so forth up to Imām Muslim.<sup>339</sup> However, if we examine the year al-'Aqīlī met al-Murādī (1205/1790), it is obvious that al-Falimbānī must have met him after that year to be able to include al-Murādī in his isnād.

Finally, as I have already mentioned in passing, it is worth noting that according to Azra's research on 'Muḥammad Murād' who was listed among al-Falimbānī's teachers, had wrongly identified as Muḥammad Khalīl al-Murādī (1173-1206/1760-91).<sup>340</sup> He argues that despite living mainly in Damascus, al-Murādī travelled extensively including to al-Ḥaramayn, collecting information on the scholars he would write about in his biographical dictionary, Saḥḥ ad-Durar,<sup>341</sup> thus making it highly probable that al-Falimbānī took the opportunity of al-Murādī's visits to al-Ḥaramayn to study with him.<sup>342</sup>

However, even though the two were contemporaries, his aforementioned isnād clearly eliminates the possibility of al-Falimbānī studying directly with al-Murādī. In other words, he would have excluded Muḥammad al-'Aqīlī from this isnād if he had studied directly with al-Murādī and hence have al-isnād al-'ālī with fewer intermediaries between him and Imām Muslim. Besides, I have demonstrated above that the Muḥammad Murād with whom al-Falimbānī studied was in fact Muḥammad Murād al-Anṣārī as-Sindī. If al-Falimbānī had scholarly links with al-Murādī, this would have to have been indirectly through at least two of his teachers, the Syrian Muḥammad b. 'Uthmān al-'Aqīlī, and the Egyptian Murtaḍā az-Zahīdī, who were both al-Murādī's direct students.<sup>343</sup>

Northwest Africa (Maghrib)

The only Northwest African (Maghribī) scholar whom I was able to find to have had contacts with 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad al-Falimbānī was Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Hilālī (d. 1175/1761).<sup>144</sup> According to al-Kattānī, Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Rashād b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz b. 'Alī b. Maḥmad (with faṭḥ) b. Muḥammad b. Imām Bāz an-Nawāzil Abī Ishāq Ibrāhīm b. Hilāl al-Hilālī as-Sijilmāsī al-Mālikī, better known as Aḥmad al-Hilālī, was born in 1113/1703 in Sijilmasa, an oasis town and medieval trade centre in western Maghrib, southeast of Fes. He was an 'ālim and a poet who also had facility in some of the Islamic sciences (mushārik fi ba'ḍ al-'ulūm).<sup>145</sup>

In his quest for 'ilm, apart from studying in his homeland with Aḥmad al-Ḥabīb aṣ-Ṣiddīqī as-Sijilmāsī, whom he regarded as his authority ('andaḥ), and Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Qādir al-Fāsi (d. 1164/1750), Aḥmad al-Hilālī also travelled to Egypt and al-Ḥijāz. During his travels, he met and studied with prominent scholars such as 'Abd Allāh al-Basrī, Aḥmad al-Mullawī, Muṣṭafā al-Bakrī, Muḥammad al-Ḥijnī and Muḥammad b. Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī (d. 1156/1743). The latter, in turn, studied with his father Ḥasan al-'Ujaymī.<sup>146</sup> As the title of one of his works suggests, it is very likely that al-Hilālī recorded the account of his travels in his ar-Riḥlah al-Makiyyah<sup>147</sup> (Perhaps, this ar-Riḥlah might provide us with more details on his travels to Mecca). He then returned to Sijilmasa where he became one of the leading scholars in Maghrib, and later died in his hometown on 12 Rabī' al-Awwal 1175/11 October 1761.<sup>148</sup>

Evidently, al-Hilālī was also a leading faqīh of the Mālikī School of Islamic jurisprudence. On fiqh, he wrote a commentary on the Mukhtaṣar Khalīl by Khalīl b. Ishāq b. Mūsā b. Shu'ayb al-Jundī (d. 767/1365) entitled Iḥḍāf al-Muḥṭaṣi' bi 'l-Qaṭi' fi Sharḥ Mukhtaṣar Khalīl,<sup>149</sup> and al-Marāḥim fi Ahkām Fasād ad-Darāḥim. His other works include a poem on invocation entitled Sharḥ aṣ-Ṣadr fī 'l-Tawassul bi-Ahl Badr, and Dirwān Shi'ir, a collection of his poems,<sup>150</sup> az-Zawāhir al-'l'fuqīyyah 'alā al-Jawāhir al-Manṭiqīyyah, a commentary in verse on logic, and three ṭabaṭ works listing his teachers and the works he received from them together with his ṭandīṭ. In this regard, al-Kattānī described his smallest thabat entitled al-'Ujūlah as consisting of four pages with his isnād on ḥadīth al-awwaliyyah, al-muṣāfaḥah (handclasp), al-mushābakah, al-musalsal bi 'l-maḥabbah, Thulūthiāt al-Bukhārī, and Dalā'il al-Khayrāt.<sup>351</sup> Apart from the al-'Ujūlah, according to al-Mar'ashī, he also compiled a larger thabat entitled Asānīd Abī al-'Abbās al-Hilālī in two volumes, and a medium thabat entitled Fahrasat al-Hilālī, a summarised version of the Asānīd.<sup>352</sup>

As for al-Falimbānī, the only known text that he learned from Ahmad al-Hilālī was Ibn Mājah's as-Sunan, one of the 'six books' of ḥadīth collections.<sup>353</sup> It is not known where he met and studied with him. However, it is very unlikely that al-Falimbānī had travelled as far as Maghrib to study with him especially that we know he was his only teacher who came from that region. On the other hand, it is highly plausible that al-Falimbānī met him during one of his above-mentioned travels to Egypt and al-Ḥijāz (in Mecca or Medina).

According to al-Kattānī, the last surviving student of Ahmad al-Hilālī was Muḥammad b. Sāliḥ az-Zakazūkī ar-Radānī who died on 24 Ramaḍān 1241/2 May 1826 thus surviving for sixty-six years after his teacher's death.<sup>354</sup> However, from al-Falimbānī's date of death demonstrated earlier as 17 Dhū al-Qa'dah 1254/1 February 1839, perhaps he was his last surviving student who lived for seventy-nine years after his death.

The Malay Archipelago

Though I have been able to trace a considerable number of al-Falimbānī's teachers with whom he studied in various centres of Islamic learning in the Arab world, unfortunately records on his teachers from the Malay Archipelago are extremely rare or perhaps non-existent. In fact, from his known works that I have consulted, I have not found al-Falimbānī mention a single name of any earlier Jāwī or Arab teachers in the Archipelago. Thus, at this point, it is practically impossible for us to list his teachers in the Archipelago, unless we find such records in the future.

Nevertheless, according to our contemporary, Shaghīr Abdullah, one of al-Falimbānī's Jāwī teachers with whom he studied during his early education was 'Abd ar-Raḥmān b. 'Abd al-Mubīn al-Fatānī. Abdullah maintains that 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Faṭānī, who comes from Pauh Bok, a village in Pattani, was among al-Falimbānī's teachers in Pattani based on oral tradition from the locals of Pauh Bok. In addition, an unpublished manuscript copy of al-'Urwat al-Wuthqā from his personal collection, scribed by 'Abd aṣ-Ṣamad b. Qunbul al-Faṭānī (whom he believes was a contemporary of al-Falimbānī) points out that al-Falimbānī studied with 'Abd ar-Rahmān.<sup>355</sup> However, it is impossible for us to verify this information, as this manuscript copy is unpublished and remains inaccessible.

Furthermore, again based on traditional narrative of the locals of Pauh Bok, Abdullah believes that 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Faṭānī was a close friend of Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm as-Sammān in Medina, who thus facilitated al-Falimbānī's later education in Mecca and Medina.<sup>356</sup> However, upon consulting the works of al-Falimbānī, as-Sammān and his students, I have not found any evidence to substantiate this narrative. Perhaps, such narratives can be found in the works of contemporary scholars to al-Falimbānī, such as the classical Malay literary story entitled Hikayat Wali Allah Syekh 'Abd ar-Rahmān Pauh Bok attributed to Dāwūd b. 'Abd Allāh al-Faṭānī. As the title would suggest, this work probably relates biographical notices and virtues of 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Faṭānī who was revered as a saint.<sup>357</sup> However, unfortunately, I have not been able to find any existing copy of this work.

To conclude, it should be clear that al-Falimbānī studied all branches of Islamic learning under a considerable number of the most renowned scholars of his time. In his lifetime, he in turn became prominent and this is evident, as we shall see, through looking at the stature of his students, to whom we turn to next.
